HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

OLD SORES, WOUNDS, AND ULCERS.—The readiness with which Holloway's unguent removes all obstructions in the circulation of the vessels and lymphatics explains their irresistible influence in healing old sores, bad wounds, and indolent ulcers. To insure the desired effect the skin surrounding the diseased part should be fomented, dried, and immediately well rubbed with the Ointment. This will give purity to the foul blood, and strength to the weakened nerves, the only conditions necessary for the cure of all those hideous ulcerations which render life almost intolerable. No sooner is this Ointment's protective power exerted than the destructive process ceases, and the constructive business begins. New healthy growths appear to fill up the lately painful excavated pit.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 1; Agra, March 30; Calcutta and Madras, March 29.

THE interest of the week in India centres on the progress of Legislative business at Calcutta. The strong opposition raised to the Income-tax Bill in the debate of March 17 has not failed to bear some little fruit. At the meeting of the Supreme Council on the 27th, Sir Richard Temple presented the Report of the Select Committee on his Bill. With regard to Mr. Cowie's proposed amendments, he announced his intention to accept the one which limited the income-tax to one year, but declined to raise the level of taxation from incomes of Rs. 750 to Rs. 1,000 a-year. At the same time he refused to make the "slightest pledge or enter into the slightest understanding that the tax would not be continued if it was considered necessary to do so." Should the necessity arise he would certainly not shrink from doing his duty. A deficit could not be allowed, and there were other taxes, such as the salt duty, the inland sugar duties, and certain export dues on agricultural products, which had the first claim on the financier's attention. As for criticism, that was the last thing he was afraid of. "The more there was of fair and honest criticism in the Council and out of it, the better and brighter would appear the financial policy of the Government." Mr. Cowie's second amendment he opposed, because "the Government could not afford to lose one fraction of estimated revenue." A native on Rs. 65 a month was just as well off as the lowest class that came under the tax in England.

MR. COWIE, speaking for the last time before starting for England, "accepted the concession so gracefully made by the Finance Member, without the addenda he had put to it." As for his other amendment, he still held that both should go together, and declined to accept Mr. J. Strachey's opinions in the teeth of those expressed by the late Sir Henry Durand, Messrs. Robinson, Inglis, and Cockerell, and the whole European and native press. Mr. George Campbell likewise complimented Sir Richard on a concession, which to himself was an agreeable surprise. Agreeing with Sir Richard that an income-tax encourages economy, he hoped that any future Bill on that subject would be brought forward "early, and not at the fag-end of the Session." All former Bills had been framed on the "stand and deliver" principle. He for his part would have accepted a higher income-tax if the assignments to the local Governments could thereby have been increased. But it would after all have been the wiser course to hand over the income-tax entirely to those Governments.

MR. ELLIS pointed out the utter impossibility of bringing an Income-tax Bill forward early in the Session, at a time when no sufficient means of framing estimates were to hand. Even now complaints were made as to the opium estimates, founded as they were on the latest telegrams.—Mr. F. Stephen made light of the outcry raised against the tax, and avowed small belief in its alleged hardships. Should the Bill be renewed, he hoped it would not be presented early in the Session. As for all the topics discussed by Mr. Campbell, he thought the Council might just as well discuss all the principles of political economy at once. His further sarcasms against the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and others who differed from himself were followed up by a lecture for the special benefit of the Legislative members. They were not to consider themselves like members of the House of Commons. "The Legislative Council did not govern India and should not attempt to govern India. The Government must be carried on by the Viceroy and the Executive Council, and for the Legislature to interfere would be to hamper and do harm to the Government of the country." The Law member of the Supreme Council has learned the trick of Indian officialism in a wonderfully short space of time.

MR. INGLIS then briefly replied to some former assertions of Mr. John Strachey's. Speaking from his own experience, which he considered wider and deeper than Mr. Strachey's, he would "appeal to the officers of Government, to the non-official public, to the officers of districts, to all in fact who were in any way acquainted with the working of the tax, to bear him out as to the truth of his previous remarks." He too maintained that the Bill should have been brought in earlier. Then followed a brief word-duel between Sir R. Temple, who quoted against Mr. Cowie a speech he had made at some previous meeting, and Mr. Cowie, who simply retorted that he was wiser now than then.

LORD MAYO followed with a quiet defence of his government from the charge of hurrying measures through the Council. Mr. Ellis had already shown, he said, how impossible it was to bring ordinary fiscal Bills before the Council until the Finance-Minister made his yearly statement. Still his Government had always desired and striven to give ample time for the discussion of such Bills. Nearly a month had been allowed for the subject in hand, a period as long as in England is often given to the discussion of measures affecting the whole Empire. Still his Excellency would never oppose any reasonable demand for more time, however impossible it would be to bring forward a financial measure more than two or three weeks sooner than they had done this year. After a few remarks from Mr. Chapman, in defence of the support he had given the present Bill, Mr. Cowie's first amendment was carried; the second was not pressed, and the amended Bill, which reduces the income-tax to $1\frac{1}{8}$ per cent. on incomes of Rs. 750 a-year and upwards, was then passed. In all likelihood the concession thus made by Sir R. Temple, in evident compliance with wiser counsels than his own, marks the final re-imposition of the income-tax as an Imperial burden. After next March, if appearances do not greatly mislead us, the local governments will be left to make what use they please of an impost which for Imperial purposes has been all but universally condemned by the official as well as the general public of British India.

Two important sittings of the Council had meanwhile been held on the 18th and 24th March. At the former Sir R. Temple delivered a long speech in answer to the criticisms of the day before. On some points he made a plausible defence; but with regard to the income-tax grievance the best he could say was that bribery and extortion prevailed to some extent in the settlement operations, in courts of justice, the police, and so on, but that we do not therefore give up settling the land revenue, administering justice, or protecting property. There is no need to point out the transparent fallacy of such reasoning, nor to doubt the substantial truth of Mr. Inglis's statements because Sir Richard may convict him of verbal exaggeration in saying that half of those not directly touched by the tax are exposed to harsh treatment in connection therewith. At the same sitting Mr. Strachey introduced a Local Taxation Bill for Oudh, one of a series that will soon become law in the various provinces, as a natural consequence of the new financial system. It asks power to levy a rate of 1¼ per cent on the land, of which 75 per cent. is to be laid out on public works in each district, under a local committee, half of whom will be non-official. Lord Mayo took the opportunity to explain the true purport of the new financial scheme, and to defend himself from the charge of benefiting the central at the expense of the local governments. A similar Bill for the North-West Provinces was brought in by Mr. Inglis.

On the 24th March Mr. Cockerell reintroduced his Bill for the Registration of Assurances, after some discussion, in which Mr. F. Stephen took a prominent part, of an amendment proposed by Mr. Chapman. Mr. Stephen's Bill for the Limitation of Suits was advanced a stage; and then the Council listened to two statements delivered respectively by Colonel Strachey and Major-General Norman, on the financial prospects of the Public Works Department and of the Indian Army. This is the first time that such departmental stocktaking has been so formally carried out. To begin with the Army Estimates; the total outlay for last year was increased at the eleventh hour by a charge of £382,000 accruing for four years past on the Transport Service. Certain reductions moreover which depended on her Majesty's Government did not take place. For the coming year the whole net outlay is estimated at £15,165,000. For the Army and Garrison Staff there will be a reduced charge of £496,916, and a slightly increased one of £211,925 for the Administrative Staff. Regimental Pay and Allowances stand at £6,481,992, a saving of £111,000; Commissariat Services at £2,212,912, a saving of £55,635; Stud and Remount Service at £216,471; Clothing Establishment at £113,264; Barrack Establishment at £377,591; Ordnance Supplies at £502,528; Medical Establishments at £460,150. The saving on Pay and Allowances is due to the reductions in Artillery and Native troops. The increase of £10,169 on Barracks includes a large sum for gymnastic stores and apparatus. The Sea-Transport Charges amount to £194,750, showing an increase of £60,520, which is owing to new charges for Overland Transports. Miscellaneous Services stand at £377,081. The charge for Volunteers shows a considerable increase on account of increased numbers.

The Home Charges of Queen's Regiments serving in India amount to £698,000; Furlough Allowances of Indian Officers to £450,000, or £66,000 more than last year. There is an increase of £100,000 for the Overland Transport Service, which stands at £320,000 — an enormous sum for the number of troops carried to and fro. Stores have risen to £824,720, Retired Pay for her Majesty's troops to £224,000, while the Retired Pay of Indian officers stands as before at £750,000. A small but curious item is that of £48,000 as India's share of the charge for absorbing supernumerary ensigns.

As General Norman points out, some of the military charges, such as pay of officers in civil employ, and of similar officers on furlough or retired, the cost of the Derajat Frontier Militia, which is more of a police in fact, and various charges for camp equipage of civil governors, arms or stores issued to native Princes, and so forth, ought properly to be struck off the military accounts. Altogether, in the opinion of Major-General Broome, about £670,000 a-year might thus be transferred to other departments.

In comparing the relative cost of the Indian and the Imperial Army, General Norman takes care to point out various items, such as Hill Sanitaria, Allowances for Soldiers' Families, the charge for malt liquor and rum, the maintenance of camp-carriage and equipment on an efficient scale, asylums for soldiers' children, sea-transport charges, pensions for native soldiers, &c., which are either not be found, or only found to a much smaller extent, in the War Office accounts. We may also remember that soldiers in India have more liberal rations than at home. One important item of increased outlay which is common to both countries, the additions made in 1867-8 to the British soldier's pay, amounts in India to a third of a million.

There are several other interesting passages in the Military Member's statement, especially his comparison of past and present outlay since the Mutiny. But we may return to this subject next week. Colonel Strachey's exposition is also full of interest. The total outlay on Ordinary Public Works has fallen from over five millions in 1869-70 down to £2,365,000 for the coming year. The estimated outlay on military buildings for 1870-71 is little over a million, nearly half a million less than in 1869. For civil buildings the charge has fallen from £680,000 to £151,000, which latter sum does not include the grant to the local governments. The Imperial charge for roads and rivers is reckoned at £116,900, which includes £35,000 for the Godavery Works, and smaller sums for roads in Central India and Rajpootana. The Miscellaneous Charges include certain sums for the Madras Pier and the Kurrachee Harbour Works. The agricultural outlay on water-works and embankments is reckoned at £455,000, including maintenance and repairs. In some provinces the revenue from irrigation works is already considerable, varying in the North-West from a quarter to a third of a million, and in the Punjab standing at £200,000. The extraordinary outlay on similar works covers a long list of useful objects, such as the Godavery Works in Madras, the new Moota Reservoir near Poonah, the Soan Works in Behar, the Orissa Works, the new Agra Canal, the new Eastern Ganges Canal, the new Sirhind Canal, the Barce Doab Canal in the Punjab, and the Sardah Canal in Oudh.

In another column will be found a letter from a shareholder in the Bengal Bank, who proposes to call a General Meeting of the Bank shareholders, to be held at No. 13 Waterloo-place on the 17th of next month. The subjects for discussion have already been indicated in letters which appeared in our issues for March 21 and March 28. The dissatisfaction which prevails in many quarters with the results of the Bank's management, as disclosed by the last half-year's Report, will no doubt appear to many a sufficient reason for instituting a careful enquiry into "the policy and whole working of the Bank for the last ten years." If nothing else remained to clear up in this respect, there would still be ground enough for such an investigation in the curious coincidence of a great increase in the number of the Bank's branches with a growing decline in the yearly dividends. People who have been in the habit of getting from 12 to 20 per cent. may well be excused for seeing something amiss in the management which now offers them only 5½ per cent.

We regret to notice the death of Major-General Sir Justin Shiel, who served as Envoy at Teheran from 1844 to 1854. This old officer was a Bengal Cadet of 1820, and one of the chief officers sent out in 1833 to drill the Persian Army for the Shah. In 1848 he obtained the First Class of the Lion and the Sun from the Persian Monarch, and a Knighthood of the Bath in 1855. His brother was the famous Richard Shiel, member of the Russell Ministry of 1847.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, April 25, 1871.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

Sir R. Temple's Estimate of the Indian Revenues for 1871-72 cannot be charged with expecting too much. The £49,098,900 of his present Budget falls nearly two millions short of the total of the Regular Estimate for last year. Nearly three-fourths of the difference is of course accounted for by the reduction of the income-tax from 3⅛ to 1½ per cent., and of taxable incomes from a minimum of Rs. 500 to one of Rs. 750 a-year. Under the revised terms only 240,000 persons will be taxed instead of 480,000, and the expected yield is put down at £600,000. One would imagine that a crop so poor would hardly be worth the trouble and the unpopularity involved in gathering it. Whether the official classes, the European traders, or the native millions are the worst sufferers, directly or indirectly, by this particular method of raising money, of its wide and lasting unpopularity there can be no doubt. Mr. G. Campbell's proposal to hand over this tax to the Local Governments would at any rate have shifted the unpleasantness of its collection on to the shoulders of those who would have the best inducements to adjust local burdens to local means. The raising of a local income-tax might well be left to the option of the provincial Governments, which have the best means of testing the fiscal resources of their several provinces, of ascertaining the drift of popular feeling on any fiscal question, and of guarding against the evils inherent in all fiscal processes carried on through native channels. The local rulers would take care to feel the pulse of the native communities, and the latter would find fewer objections to the levying with their own consent of an impost the fruits of which would be laid out for their own benefit under their own eyes. There is hardly a tax which is equally suited to all parts of India, and it has become a standing grievance among our native subjects, that the money taken from them for administrative purposes may be expended in some distant province on objects in which they have no apparent concern. In so vast a country as India, by bringing the taxes and the outlay of each province as far as possible under its own control, we should certainly be bringing governors and governed into ever closer harmony on those points which most nearly touch the permanence of our Indian rule. This end indeed will anyhow be greatly furthered by the new system of transferring to local governments the sole management of certain services hitherto maintained out of the Imperial Treasury. But the concession thus wisely made in the interests both of the Supreme and the local Governments would have been greatly enhanced in value if the Supreme Government, instead of cutting down by a third of a million the sums handed over to the provincial treasuries, had been wise enough to wipe out of the Imperial reckoning a tax which in one shape or another has already become familiar to the people in more than one Indian province, and must soon become the mainstay of local government in all.

There is the less need for continuing it as an Imperial impost, when we come to look at other items in the Finance Minister's Bill. Why, for instance, does Sir Richard estimate the land-revenue for the new year at £300,000 less than the 21 millions actually received in 1869-70? It is true that last year his receipts on this account were only £20,653,400, but even this sum exceeded the Budget estimate for that year by £100,000, and is only £56,000 less than the Budget estimate for the new year. It is also true that the yield for 1869-70 included some items which will not very soon recur: but after all deductions, has he not pitched his estimate too low? The increase of land-revenue, if slow, has always been sure, and there is no reason why last year's decline should not be fully compensated in the next returns. On Excise and Customs again Sir Richard has underrated his returns by at least £200,000 between the two. But a burnt child dreads the fire, and Sir Richard, after a year of commercial depression, appears to reckon upon no improvement in the immediate future. The same sombre colouring marks his estimates for railways, irrigation works, and public works ordinary. In his estimates of expenditure, on the other hand, his caution wears a different guise. We get few gleams of sunshine between the clouds of increased outlay until we come to a saving of about £316,000 on the Army. This includes a retrenchment of £100,000 for the Native troops and of £70,000 for the Artillery. Unluckily, the retrenchments seem to be made in the wrong places; at any rate, Lord Napier declines to see the wisdom of relieving the finances at a loss to India of thirty light field-guns. One remembers also that Sir Richard's Budget for 1870-71 missed the mark of actual outlay for that year by a trifling oversight of more than half-a-million. It would be rash, therefore, to put too much faith in the present figures, and even if his estimates should prove correct, it would need an exceptional amount of innocence or forgetfulness to accept the inference suggested by his comparison of the figures for the coming year with those of 1861-2. Sir Richard's financial training, if it has taught him little else, has at least made him a fair adept in the art of conjuring with figures and suppressing facts. What a capital suggestio falsi is thrown out in his reticent avowal that "on the whole the amount estimated in India for 1871-72, namely, £12,410,000, is the lowest amount that has been taken for any year since the war of the Mutinies!" Would it not seem as though the present cost of our Indian Army were no higher than the charges for an army of the same strength in 1861?

Unhappily for Sir Richard there is an old Indian officer now at home, who has a memory. Major-General Sir G. Balfour, in a letter to the Times, supplies the missing facts that reveal the fallacy of Sir Richard's figures. It is all very well, he observes, to state that the estimated outlay in India for the coming year is less than that of any year since the Mutiny. It is "nominally £510 less than the expenditure of 1862-63," but what then? This "local reduction of expenditure is all there is to show for a local reduction of troops who cost fully two millions sterling." In the second place, the entire out'ay for the smaller force, after all the reductions made in 1863-64, "has positively increased by about a million and a half." Moreover, by Sir R. Temple's own admission, it appears that a good deal of the increased outlay in England is "really a mere transfer of account, by the present payment in England of officers on furlough." In short, according to Sir George Balfour, the amount that ought to have been yearly saved on the Indian Army "at the rates of cost established in 1862-63" would be over three millions instead of three hundred thousand pounds.

How comes it then that the largely reduced Indian Army still costs about sixteen millions a-year instead of thirteen millions? Some part of the excess must of course be traceable to that fatal legacy of 1861, a Staff Corps that grows more and more top-heavy year by year. An army of field officers cannot be maintained for nothing, and every year sees large additions to its numbers and consequent cost. The outlay on European stores again for the last three years has averaged, according to General Balfour, "much more than double the amount spent for a larger army in 1862-63." How much of that increase is really due to the need of furnishing India with new guns and rifles? A yet more fruitful and far less explicable source of expense to India was indicated in the answer made last Thursday to Colonel Sykes by the Under Secretary for India. It is declared to be only too true that the cost of drilling and preparing a European recruit for Indian service had risen from less than £20 a-head in the last years of the Company's rule to £205 a-head in 1867-8. In future, says Mr. Grant Duff, India is to be charged £136 12s. 11d. for each cavalry, and £69. 8s. 5d. for each infantry recruit, over and above the cost of his passage out. Here is an item of increased cost, which even under the new arrangements will make a difference against India of about half-a-million a-year. What India gains by this additional outlay in the shape of increased military efficiency Mr. Grant Duff did not explain. It would not however be very unreasonable to assume that a good deal more than the amount of income-tax estimated for the coming year might be saved by a judicious retrenchment of the estimates for the Indian Army. Sir G. Balfour asks for a saving of three millions. We for our part would be fairly satisfied with one.

BENGAL BANK.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—With reference to two letters on the above subject, one of the 21st and the other of the 28th March, both practically useful and much to the point, I will simply suggest that a general meeting of all the Bengal Bank Shareholders in London should be held on the 17th of May (Wednesday) at four o'clock in the afternoon, at the office of Messrs. Allen (of the Indian Mail) in Waterloo-place, who very kindly offered the use of a room for this purpose last year.—Faithfully yours,

A Shareholder.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—As Headman and Lumberdar of an extensive village community, I crave permission to make the sentiments and wants of my co-sharers and myself known through your columns.

It has lately come to our knowledge that the British Parliament, in their earnest desire to do justice to India, have been pleased to nominate a committee of their own body, to inquire into and report upon the financial administration of this country, and especially on the comparative advantages of a permanent or periodical settlement of the land revenue.

Now, Sir, as this latter question is to us and our children one of the most vital importance, we entertain strong hopes that the Committee will not be satisfied with the evidence received from European officers of the Government, whose local experience was but limited, and dates in some cases so far back as thirty years, when India was so little advanced that for want of common roads Governor-Generals and their suites had to traverse the country in palanquins.

We are confident that the committee will see that to obtain sound and accurate knowledge of this difficult subject it is requisite that they should hear what the natives of India themselves, as the parties most concerned and best acquainted with it, have to say on the question. The present inquiry will not, we are sure, be carried on as previous ones in "the old round the Cape days," when it was impossible for natives of India, especially Hindoos, to visit Europe, or to be personally examined. Now however that the voyage from Bombay to Suez occupies no more than fourteen days, even Hindoos can undertake it without risk to their health or to their caste, so far as arrangements for their food and water are concerned, provided that they are required by orders of Government to proceed across the sea, for, according to the Shastres, no loss of caste could then be incurred. We hope therefore that the Committee will call upon the Governments in India to direct some competent and intelligent natives, and who may be selected for the purpose by their different communities, to proceed to England for examination by the Committee. If the requisition be made at once by the Committee, the natives summoned to appear might give their evidence and be safe back at their homes before the European winter sets in. In the meantime, we would implore the Committee to bear in mind how dear and highly prized is that word "permanent" to us natives of India, who have not the blessing of living under a representative form of Government. If the Permanent Settlement, as at present existing in the Lower Provinces and Bengal, be open to objection, we wish the Committee to know that to us, who inhabit the Upper Provinces, the system of Periodical Settlements is well nigh intolerable. The changes in the proportion of the Government demands and the landholders' profits, and the introduction from time to time of new cesses and imposts, have undermined the confidence of the people in the Administration. The very summary and arbitrary way in which "Settlement officers" estimate the gross income, and include all possible prospective profits in their calculations, is most harassing to us, and effectually deters us from laying out any capital in the improvement of the land, and in the development of the resources of the country. The system leads also to much bribery, corruption, and falsification of records, such as placing cultivated lands under the heading of waste and jungle, &c. Instead of these periodical settlements we are desirous, first, that the percentage of the Government demand on the gross income may be fixed by legal enactment; second, that the thirty years' Settlement be abolished; third, that the right be given to the Government to demand its quota whenever an increase of more than twenty-five per cent. on the gross income be found to exist; fourth, that the landholder be granted the right to demand a reduction when there is a decrease in the gross income of more than twenty-five per cent.; fifth, that all claims of arrears, dispossession, occupation, &c., preferred before the Courts under Act X. of 1859 be dismissed unless the leases be produced, and all falsification of village records by putwarrees, &c., be punishable by imprisonment; sixth, that landholders be allowed a share in the increasing profits of the land held by tenants having a right of occupancy. By increasing the income of the landholder the Government will increase its own revenues, and at present landholders, having no interest in tenants having a permanent right of occupancy, too often use every effort to ruin and get rid of them; seventh, and lastly, that the expenses of law suits be diminished, which have of late increased so much that poor tenants are often ordered to pay four times the amount of the sum for which they are sued, and which in the first instance they were unable to pay. These poor persons are thus frequently ruined, and forced to abscond, and probably become thieves for a livelihood.

We feel confident that these suggestions would satisfy the landed body of the North-West Provinces, and, if adopted, these provinces would make in three years more progress than they have done in the last thirty.—I am, &c.,

La Langue et la Littérature Hindoustanies en 1870; Revue annuelle. Par M. Garcin de Tassy, Professeur a l'Ecole speciale des Langues Orientales Vivantes, etc. Paris. 1871.

Few persons, perhaps, beyond the limited number who take a special interest in the subject have any adequate idea of the rapid progress of literature in India within the last few years. By no other living author is this topic handled more comprehensively and in a more catholic spirit—free from all national, sectarian, or theoretical bias—than by M. Garcin de Tassy in his annual opening addresses to the students at the "Ecole Imperiale et spéciale des Langues Vivantes," at Paris. Owing to the disastrous war the usual "Discours d'Ouverture" was not delivered in December last, but the professor has made up for the omission by publishing a review of the literary and consequent social development in India during the past year. The retrospect affords additional proof that the native mind, long dormant, is fast awakening to a vigorous apprehension of the power as well as the utility of knowledge. The praiseworthy initiative on the part of the Government to promote education among all classes of the community has stimulated a general desire for enlightenment, and Hindûs and Muslims are vying which shall outstrip the other in the literary race. At the annual meeting of the Delhi College, called the "House of Science," towards the end of 1869, an eloquent speech on the apathy of his co-religionists was made by one Sayyid Muhammad 'Alî, a learned Maulawî of Mirzâpûr, which moved the audience to tears:—

"Muslims!" he began; "it is now twelve centuries since God set up the lamp of religion and science in Arabia, the light of which he has gradually scattered over the world. It is eight centuries since the rays of that light first reached Hindustân, illuminating the whole country in a short space of time. Is there, in fact, any place in India where this light has not penetrated? It was from this city of Delhi that its rays first shone forth, for when the Muslim kings conquered India they made Delhi their capital, and rendered it illustrious by inviting thither the most eminent scholars among the Arabs and Persians. This city became thenceforward the treasury of science and the mine of perfection. . . Call to mind, Muslims, that it was your ancestors who were the teachers and Imâms of the Indians, and who placed on your head the crown of instruction. Let it not be said that you are no longer able to read their literary productions or the annals of the warlike achievements of your progenitors."

Notwithstanding the reproof implied in this prologue, M. Garcin de Tassy points to the formation of literary societies in most of the principal towns, and to the successful publication of editions of their standard theological and other works, as unquestionable evidence of a revival of serious aspirations among the Muslims of India. Among the societies indicated is that of Bihâr, consisting chiefly, though not exclusively, of Muslims. The object of this scientific body is the amelioration of the moral and intellectual condition of the masses by a comprehensive system of education. It publishes a journal, encourages the translation of European works into Hindustânî, intends to erect a suitable building for the institution, to open workshops for the instruction of the poorer classes in agriculture and mechanics, to form a library of Oriental books, &c. It has already founded five schools, one of which, consisting of Muslims and Hindûs, is in successful operation, "the Indians, as it would seem, not having that repugnance for mixed establishments of the kind which is entertained by some too exclusive persons in France and Ireland. In this school European science is communicated through the medium of the Urdû, and the pupils are taught their respective sacred languages, a Pandit being engaged to teach Sanscrit and a Maulawî Arabic." The progress of a corresponding movement among the Hindûs is not less strongly marked. Conspicuous among the Revivalists are the members of the Brahma Samâj, or the Church of God, founded in 1830 by the celebrated Râm Râé, and now presided over by our late visitor, the Bâbû Keshâb Chandar Sen. Though mainly a religious reformer, the accomplished Bâbû is a zealous advocate for education. His antecedents and aims, and the success which has hitherto attended his efforts, are summarily set forth by M. Garcin de Tassy in the following quotation:—

This Hindû, admitted as an orphan into a college at Calcutta, acquired at an early age a profound knowledge of the English language and literature. With a mind so cultivated, he soon began to despise the worship of idols, until at length, by dint of reflection and prayer, he arrived at the belief in one God. He then joined a society known in India as the Brahma Samâj, and shortly after became one of its most ardent supporters. For a long time he officiated as minister to a church at Calcutta, where he preached regularly to large native audiences. At the present day there are not less than fifty churches of the same denomination scattered over the country. Concurrently, Keshâb was untiring in his efforts for the promotion of education, the amelioration of the condition of females, the prevention of precocious marriages, and the destruction of caste, which has always been a barrier to the progress of the country. Keshâb is now the representative of the great reforming party in Bengal. The movement set on foot by that party may be regarded as a leaven which is gradually leavening the middle classes of Hindû society.

Meanwhile, ancient Hindûism, nothing daunted by the antagonism of these dissenters, still has its Dharma sabhâ, or Society of the Orthodox Faith, whose proceedings are regularly published in detail in the Awadh Akhbâr. That journal informs us that the members of the association perform the dandwat, or "prostration," to the image of Dévî, the Goddess par excellence—namely, Durgâ or Bhawânî, commonly styled Srî Mahâ Mâi Jî, the eminently Holy Mother, before their stated meetings at Kângarh. We learn from the same source that this society endeavours to propagate its views by the extensive circulation of its published proceedings. But, notwithstanding these efforts of the Orthodox, unmistakable signs of progression among the Hindûs are gradually being developed in every part of India. Although the caste system has not been renounced, many concessions have been made of late years to the inferior castes; the Pandits have discovered that the marriage of widows is not prohibited by the laws of Manu; they have, moreover, admitted the right of Hindûs to traverse the ocean without forfeiting their caste, and infractions of the old law which prohibited the Brahmans from eating meat and drinking wine, are treated leniently. Little by little the practice is coming into vogue of not contracting marriages before the parties have attained the age of puberty; the Brahmans allow their children to be educated in the same schools with children of the lower castes; and the Dharma sabhâ of Calcutta is presided over by a Sudra, while the secretary is a Brahman. Caste, in fact, is fast losing its religious character, and becoming nothing more than a civil institution.

From the absence of all allusion in M. Garcin de Tassy's review to any such manifestation, it would appear that the emulation between the Muslims and Hindûs is carried on without that acrimony which inevitably accompanies similar rivalry between discordant Christian sects in Europe. The controversy which still divides them into two conflicting camps has reference to the language to be adopted in a system of national education and in all departments of the State, the Hindûs contending for the Hindî, the idiom of the Middle Ages, the Muslims advocating the Urdû, fundamentally the same dialect, but considerably enlarged since the Mohammedan conquest of India by words and phrases borrowed from the Arabic and Persian. The Hindûs are not careful to conceal that their repugnance to the Urdû arises mainly from a traditional hatred of the Muslim yoke, and so deep-rooted is this sentiment that of the two, Urdû and English, many of them would prefer the general adoption of the latter, notwithstanding its wide divergence from the genius of their native tongue. The French professor, himself an eminent Hindî scholar, upholds the Urdû, and judging from the following remarks by a native writer published in the 'Aligarh akhbâr in reply to the question, What is Hindî? the Urdûists have the best of the argument:—

The advocates of the Hindî are in favour of an idiom which shall retain all the inflexions of the ordinary Hindustânî, conjointly with the substitution of Sanscrit in lieu of the Arabic and Persian words which have been introduced into that language. No such dialect exists, and we doubt the feasibility of its creation. That Hindû scholars should create a language of that kind for their own use is neither blamable nor praiseworthy, except that by so separating themselves from the literary development of the nation generally they must effectually retard it. To maintain that the introduction of such a language would be an advantage to the cultivators and landed proprietors who live under English law and resort to the courts of justice seems to me an absurdity. The language of those courts, up to a certain point, must necessarily be technical. Now, all vulgar idioms are too indefinite in their vague state to be capable of supplying expressions sufficiently exact to guard against misapprehension. Those expressions which have hitherto been borrowed from the Arabic or Persian are now generally recognised and understood; to substitute others in their stead would be to bewilder everybody.

The aim, therefore, of the Hindû agitators is simply to effect the rejection of those words, now as familiar to the Indian people as words of the kind can be, and to replace them by unknown Sanscrit words utterly foreign to the ordinary language, and that, forsooth, because the majority of the nation is Hindû, and because upwards of a thousand years ago Sanscrit was the language of the country. With as much reason might a learned Englishman contend for the elimination of all Latin and French words from the English tongue, and the substitution of Saxon words in their stead. . . .

If it be remembered that the Urdû took its rise and acquired its development, through centuries of different tendencies, among a people who by slow degrees have at length progressed so far as to conceive the possibility of a civil confraternity, to be formed, not without great difficulty, out of the ruin of empires, kingdoms, and viceroyalties, the conviction must force itself upon the mind that what we need is continuity with, not a violent scission from, the ancient past, agglutination and coherence and not factious division, the development of that which exists and not an entirely strange and exceptional system such as the movement of the Hindûs in favour of the Hindî would impose upon us.

M. Garcin de Tassy gives several other quotations from contemporary native sources on the same side, written for the most part with considerable philosophical acumen and sound sense. On the other hand, he enumerates some important new works and reprints in Hindî, among which are the Bîr Singh Kâ vrittant, an essay against infanticide; a new translation of the Sanscrit drama of Sakuntala; extracts from the poems of Padmâwat on the amours between 'Alâ-ud-Dîn Khiljî, the King of Dehli, and Padmâwatî, the wife of the Râjâ of Chitore; and a collection entitled Sikshâ subodinî specially intended for the instruction of females.

The activity of the native mind is further evinced by the increasing demand for newspapers and other periodicals. No less than eleven new publications of that class have made their appearance within the last year. We lack space to notice these in detail, but an article in the Agra Nûr-ul-Absâr, or the Light of the Eyes, deserves special mention, owing to its quaintness; it attributes the victories gained by the Germans over the French to the fact that the former are in the habit of perusing the sacred Scriptures, where they found an effectual spell, borrowed from the Vêdas, and where, according to the Hindû journalist, King William should have gone to look for it at the commencement of the war. The implied contrast between his Scripture-reading subjects and the new Emperor of Germany is by no means flattering to the piety of the latter. But what will our American cousins think of the following criticism on their matrimonial preferences? It appeared first in the Bombay Kashf-ul-Akhbâr:—

What French women like in a husband is an open forehead and a smiling countenance. German women fancy husbands who are agreeable and true to their word. Dutch, those who are peacefully inclined and are indisposed to quarrel or to fight. Spanish ladies, such as are capable of maintaining their rights and of taking revenge. Italian women like husbands who are wholly given up to reverie and the dolce far niente. Russian women prefer their own countrymen, who consider occidentals as barbarians. Danish women elect husbands who stay at home and dislike travelling. English women affect gentlemen who frequent and know how to secure the favour of the great. But as for American women they would marry no matter whom, without disquieting themselves about rank or social position, and without caring a straw whether the individuals were maimed or halt, deaf or blind, provided only that they were rich.

Heartily recognising every effort, from whatever quarter, to promote intellectual and social progress among the people of India, M. Garcin de Tassy does not omit to chronicle the labours of Christian missionaries of all denominations, and to rejoice in their success. He refers to a Catalogue of the Christian Vernacular Literature of India, printed at Madras, consisting of publications in Urdû and Hindî, and other native dialects, which together form a considerable library, and he mentions the fact that several of the more distinguished converts to Christianity are eminent as authors. He eulogises "Mgr. Milman," the Bishop of Calcutta, for his colloquial attainments in Hindustânî, and also for his indefatigable zeal; and records the circumstance of his "Grace" having visited the Roman Catholic as well as the Protestant Churches in Burmah. He also notices the great increase in the number of the native clergy in connection with Anglican and other Reformed Missions, and thinks that the Roman Catholics would do well to imitate them by adopting a vernacular instead of a Latin service in their ministrations:—

There may be some reason why Latin is still retained in Europe, where it was once generally understood; but one can hardly conceive why it should be adopted in other parts of the world, where it is utterly unknown. It was not so in the early ages of the Church, and liturgies in their own tongue are still used by the Greeks, Copts, Ethiopians, Arabs, Syrians, Chaldeans, Armenians, Slaves, etc., even by the seceders from those communities who are now united to Rome. Such variety is pleasing to God; the Church, like the spouse of Solomon who typified it, should not be clothed in a uniform array, but "in vestitu deaurato, circumdata varietate."

Europeans, Muslims, and Hindûs, official and non-official, who are actively engaged in promoting the cause of education and of social progress in India, share in M. Garcin de Tassy's generous encomiums; and it is as gratifying as it is rare to find a Frenchman discussing such a topic in so liberal a spirit, and without a spark of national jealousy. We commend the Professor's admirable transliteration of Oriental names and phrases, preserving, as it does, the correct etymology of the original, to the best attention of all writers on Indian subjects.

The Student's Grammar of the Hindî Language. By the Rev. W. Etherington, Missionary, Benares. Benares: Lazarus and Co. London: Trübner and Co. 1870.

The special work of Christian Missionaries is to preach the Gospel to the people to whom they are sent, and by means of schools, the distribution of the Scriptures, religious tracts, &c., to do all in their power to further the work of their congregation. For this end, the acquisition of the language of the people amongst whom they labour is a first and indispensable duty; and if, in the pursuance of their linguistic studies, or after having thoroughly mastered the native tongue, they can find time—without neglecting their special ministerial work—to compose grammars and dictionaries of the language, they may thus not only do great service to the cause of missions, by facilitating the studies of succeeding evangelists, but also "serve their generation," in a most important manner, by smoothing the way to all future students of the tongue. Both as regards the numerous Indian vernaculars, and also those of China and other Asiatic countries, as well as of Africa, America, &c., the first, and often the best or only grammars and lexicons have been the works of Christian Missionaries. The volume before us has a similar parentage. "The want of a Hindî grammar," says Mr. Etherington, "has long been felt; no attempt that I am aware of has hitherto been made to supply it, except 'The Elements of Hindî and Braj Bhakha Grammar,' by the late Dr. Ballantyne, which, though good so far as it goes, contains but the bare outlines of the subject in thirty-seven large-print pages." This is not strictly true, except as regards English students; a very good Hindî grammar, for the use of natives, having been compiled many years since by the Rev. M. T. Adams, of the London Missionary Society, to which Mr. Etherington makes no reference in his preface. The recently published edition of Dr. Ballantyne's Grammar, by Professor Fitz-E. Hall (Trübner), might also have been noticed, as an improvement of the original, though by no means a complete or exhaustive work. But, after all, the peculiarities of Hindî—as distinguished from Urdû—grammar, might be disposed of in a volume very much smaller than that of Mr. Etherington's. He says he has "consulted the Hindustanî grammars of Shakespear, Forbes, and Monier Williams, and derived some aid from them." In reality, at least three-fourths of his Hindî grammar are in substance, if not verbatim, contained in those well-known works, almost the only difference being that the Nagarî character is substituted for the Persian.

To those who may determine to commence with Hindî in their acquisition of the Indian dialects, the "Student's Grammar" of Mr. Etherington is all that can be desired, and contains nothing that is superfluous. But the fact being that, at least in nine cases out of ten, considerable progress has been made either in Urdû—the Lingua franca of India—or in Sanskrit, the present language of most of the vernaculars, or in some one of the other spoken dialects, before the special study of Hindî or Hindui is begun, all that in general is required is a brief grammar, or supplement to an Urdû grammar, pointing out the peculiarities of the Hindî idiom and construction; for the reading of such works as the Prem Sagur, Mr. Etherington's Grammar is not a sufficient instructor. Dr. Ballantyne's little volume will be found more useful, or, better still, the admirable Hindui Grammar (in French) by M. Garcin de Tassy. Whereas, for such mongrel Hindî as that of the Baitâl Pachîsî, little more is requisite than a good knowledge of Urdû grammar and a slight acquaintance with Sanskrit.

We must do Mr. Etherington the justice to say that, as a "Grammar of the Hindî Language," pure and simple, not professing to treat of the Hinduî and Braj Bhakha dialects (necessary as a knowledge of these is for the perusal of Hindî literature), his work is most complete. The concluding chapter on "Prosody," by Mr. Christian, of Monghyr, is especially valuable and important, a great desideratum in all previous grammars. The selections for reading appended, have been judiciously made; and, altogether, we agree with the Lieutenant-Governor and the Director of Public Instruction in the N.W. Provinces, in considering the work "a scholarly production," a translation of which into Urdû or Hindî "would be a valuable contribution to vernacular literature."

Several misprints occur, not noticed in the errata, but these, no doubt, will be corrected in the next edition. We should suggest that in the case of final compound letters the final inherent vowel should be expressed; thus "râjya" is the proper Romanising, and not "rájy," as given by Mr. Etherington. We had marked several other points for animadversion and suggestion, but must leave them in abeyance, having already exceeded our limits.

THE BUDGET DEBATE.

The Englishman points out that not a single great officer of State ventured to defend either Sir Richard Temple's policy as a whole, or that principle of direct taxation which seems to be his sole conception of Indian financiership, and his sole resource in Indian deficits. The entire Ministerial argument consisted in throwing doubts upon the accuracy of the Opposition's statements—statements which everybody must perceive that the gentlemen who made them were in an infinitely better position to verify and pronounce upon than the members of the Executive who denied them. These gentlemen, with great good sense, spoke each man about his own province, about the people among whom he had lived during the enforcement of the tax, and from whom the Executive was separated by thousands of miles, and by that barrier which hedges round the calm official coterie at Simla from the outside Indian world. Not a single official member ventured to dispute the hatefulness of the tax. Last year they had, one after the other, from the Viceroy downwards, declared it to be an odious impost, and, so far as their speeches last Friday indicate, they still, in the bottom of their hearts, believe it an odious impost to this day. Their chivalry, and possibly their compassion for the unfortunate member of their body, under whose weight the Government has been staggering for the last three years, forced them to say something in the defence of his measure. But in that defence they most carefully avoided committing themselves too deeply to his views, and in order to defend him at all, they had to resort to a well-known sophism, and more or less adroitly, according to their ability, to shift the ground upon which the Opposition's arguments were based, for no one can have failed to observe that the Opposition rested their case, not upon officially recorded facts, but upon the universal consensus of public opinion. One after the other, they declared that the true facts of the case never reached formal reports, and were beyond the domain of official verification. The men who most strongly insisted on this were themselves officials who had been selected for their wide experience in their respective provinces. If the steady agitation by the press last year attained nothing else, it has at least, for the first time in the history of an Indian measure, made public opinion the basis of a constitutional opposition to the Government by the Government representatives of four great Presidencies or Provinces. Now what the Executive did was this: It shifted the ground of argument from public opinion to officially recorded facts, pretending to forget that such reports had been, from the very outset, rejected as evidence by the Opposition, and placed altogether outside their argument. We think that the Executive is to be congratulated upon its failure, even by such sophistry, to make out a case. They must well know that the fact of official knowledge being entirely different from public opinion may tell, not in one, but in two ways. That it may indicate, not as they tried to argue, that the public opinion was unfounded, but that the Indian system of official reports is incapable of bringing facts known to every one to the knowledge of the Government. Had they established their case, it would have done the present Government more harm with the Parliamentary Committee now sitting than a score of defeats such as they sustained on Friday. Fortunately for those members of the Supreme Government who love the cedar walks of Simla, the Ministry entirely failed to make out its case. It did not succeed in showing that the information which had come before it was really at variance with the popular view of the tax. Not a member dared to get up in his place and say that a single Governor of a Province had expressed his satisfaction with the working of the impost, or his conviction of its suitability to the country. Not one of them ventured to state that he had himself a scrap of official evidence to believe in its suitability. The only member who ventured on such dangerous ground at all was the Honourable Mr. Strachey, and in a debate in which he spoke with unusual severity, even he only ventured to refer, not to the tax of last year, but to the tax of ten years ago. We can scarcely conceive it possible that such an analogy will carry a grain of weight with any dispassionate inquirer. Mr. Wilson levied a tax which was in reality a penalty for mutiny and rebellion imposed upon a newly reconquered country, the majority of whose inhabitants were only too happy to obtain the re-establishment of peace and security on any terms whatever. Mr. Wilson's measure belongs to a period happily as far separated from the present one as a century ago. Moreover, Mr. Strachey carefully confines his remarks to his own experience in his own district, and it must be remembered that it was as a model district officer, without any secretariat influence or training, and solely from the fact that he was the best collector in his Province, that Mr. Strachey was selected for that conspicuous career which has landed him in his present high place.

IMPORT DUTIES.

The Englishman thinks that there are, perhaps, no questions in the determination of which considerations of expediency claim more attention than those connected with the taxing of a people. The comparative popularity of a tax may, to the political economist, be a point of minor importance; to the statesmen it should be an essential, if not a paramount, consideration. For the evils which flow from popular discontent political economy provides no remedy; and since they are the greatest evils from which a country can suffer, the true statesman will bear constantly in mind the importance of averting them. In his decision regarding the comparative demerits of these taxes, Mr. Strachey leaves the feeling of the people entirely out of the account. The export duty on rice, the transit duties on sugar, are grave economical blunders, which should never have been committed, and which should be corrected at the earliest opportunity; but they are not blunders to be corrected at the expense of a general catastrophe. Even those who are the chief sufferers by them would be unwilling to purchase relief at the cost of troubles which would render that relief worse than nugatory. Believing, as we do, that the odium and disrepute into which the income-tax has brought our rule are both real and serious, and believing safety to be the paramount consideration, we have no doubt that, wherever we have any revenue to spare, the income-tax is what we should first dispense with. By all means let the abolition of the export and sugar duties come next. Mr. Strachey, however, prefers not only the removal of the export duties, but the reduction of the import duties, to the abolition of the income-tax. In this case, to our thinking, he errs without even the shadow of an excuse which he possessed in the other. As between an income-tax and import duties, the question is not between two bad taxes, but between a bad tax and a good one. Both political economy and higher statesmanship point as strongly to the retention of import duties as to the abolition of the income-tax. One of the great mistakes of our financial system is our failure to avail ourselves of the opportunity of increasing our revenue by imposing a sufficient duty upon the import of cotton goods. Instead of retaining an income-tax to enable us to reduce these duties, there can be no doubt that we should rather increase them to enable us to get rid of both income-tax and export duties. How a reduction of the import duties would convert the income-tax into a source of strength Mr. Strachey does not explain.

FINANCIAL SECRETARIES.

The Madras Times thinks that it would be advantageous if there were always one member of a Government thoroughly conversant with financial business from long experience and desk work, and on this account we should be glad to see the leading financial officer of a Presidency relegated to Council more often than has hitherto been the rule. But in any case it is, we think, perfectly clear that the addition of a Financial Secretary to the different Governments must be a great advantage, for the step would be calculated to make them strong on a point where, as a rule, they are at present weak. It is, however, very far from being all that would be gained by such an appointment. A little consideration will show that in another way it would be conducive of great improvement in the transaction of business. At present, questions of a financial character which come before Government have to be referred from Government to the Accountant-general, and are by him handed back to the Secretariat, to be dealt with finally by the Secretary to whose department such questions appertain. Now if the Accountants-general were also Financial Secretaries all this handing of documents backwards and forwards would be avoided. The Accountant-general would himself, in his capacity of Secretary, be able at once to place the facts of every case before the Governor and Councillors, and thus the transaction of business connected with the department of finance would be facilitated and simplified in a manner to be appreciated by all who are not devoted to the system of circumlocution, and sworn supporters of the "how not to do it" theory. Moreover, the fact must not be overlooked that the Accountant-general is now called on much more than formerly to serve two masters. Spite of the Scripture maxim to the contrary, he is expected neither to hate nor despise either of them. This appears to us to be an exceedingly anomalous position, and one in which it would be remarkably unpleasant to be placed, for we should say the proverb of coming to grief between two stools would be very likely to be verified in his case. Be this as it may, it is clear that he is, now that the decentralisation of the finances has been carried out, quite as much a local as a Supreme Government official. He will now be in many respects directly under the orders of the local Government, and have nothing or next to nothing to do with Calcutta as regards a large portion of his official work. Clearly, therefore, the references to him will be much more frequent than they have been, and altogether Government will be brought much more in contact with him in every way.

Married or Unmarried Soldiers.—A strange controversy seems to have found its way into the home papers, as to whether soldiers coming to India could be allowed to bring wives. A worse controversy or one more indicative of national decadence could not well be raised. If soldiers are not to bring wives to India, what then? We know what the question means, and a damnable one it is. It means what we do not care to write here, but what will never be accepted by Englishmen till they are as a people on a fair way to ruin. Instead of preventing soldiers from taking wives, we say, give every soldier the opportunity of marrying, in India or anywhere, and the result will be beneficial to the army.—Friend of India.

THE DEBATE ON THE INDIAN BUDGET.

In the course of his speech the Hon. Mr. Robinson made the following remarks :—I will not, my Lord, trouble this Council with general observations on the subject of an income-tax per se as a means of raising Imperial revenue. It is unsuited in the main to the condition of India. It is, in the form presented to us, a purely English source of taxation, and it certainly suits a country where there is no land-tax as in India—a country which is increasingly becoming an entrepôt of commerce and manufacture, where the bulk of the population is ceasing to be agricultural, and where capital is mostly employed in other industries. For in England, in the course of one generation, the proportion of the population employed in agriculture has diminished from one-third to one-tenth. In 1831 it was 28 per cent., in 1861 10 per cent., and the census of 1871 will probably declare a still more surprising condition of industry and capital. In England, then, this tax is generally equitable, and clearly is in its place. And I would willingly see it continued in those towns of this country where anything like similar conditions prevail. But we have no instance of the successful application of an income-tax of this kind to a poor agricultural country like India, where every condition of taxation, and of society, property, and capital, is absolutely reversed. I am perfectly satisfied that this form of taxation is eminently unsuited to and absolutely unfair in this land of small peasant-farmers and moderate proprietors ; where agriculture is almost the only industry, and employs eighty per cent. of the indigent population ; and where probably nearly one-half of the average profits of all agricultural toil, industry, and capital is already swept away by crushing taxation, to pay military charges and the interest on old war loans, and for the costly administration of the most expensive nation in the world. An income-tax is, I think, utterly out of place and inequitable amongst an agricultural population already placed relatively at great disadvantage as respects taxation, and the inequitableness of this additional tax on their profits is at this moment enhanced by the fact that it operates in further diminution of agricultural profits, at a time when they are already in course of serious additional narrowing under the revised settlements which are being carried out throughout the length and breadth of the land, which are likely to diminish seriously the value of all landed property as an investment and a means of livelihood. The Government of India have before them papers from Madras which show how utterly impossible it is to assess equitably landed incomes in this country (and in almost every income-tax assessment the land question is involved) without disturbing far and wide existing conditions, exciting deep agrarian discontent, and causing much confusion, oppression, and corruption. The " rack-rent " of landed property cannot be ascertained without inquisitorial measures and a departure from the existing system of land administration, which would cause serious dissatisfaction. In short, I consider that the levy of an income-tax on agricultural interests, as they now present themselves in India, is impolitic and inequitable, and now, I believe, happily needless. With respect to the monied interests of this country, a plea for levying an income-tax, were it necessary, is certainly more valid. I would willingly see the income-tax continued in the Presidency towns and in some large cities in the Gangetic Valley, and at the entrepots of the cotton trade in Bombay. But as respects the vast number of native sowcars and money-lenders who come under its operation in the agricultural parts of the country I think that the money which is in their hands is practically agricultural capital in another form. The native bankers it is who in a great measure enable agriculture to go on at all, and to be extended. They supply the needy cultivators with the capital which they require, and provide them with what their landlords fail to give them. They bring the crops into advantageous markets; and, lastly, they furnish in a great measure the means for the punctual realisation, by Government, of the periodical instalments of the land revenue. Much, and very often most thoughtlessly, as this class of men is abused, none more deserve consideration and liberality at the hands of the State. And they may well be excused special taxation—save for provincial purposes, more especially as it is now unnecessary. As before said, there are classes of capitalists, manufacturers, merchants, bankers, and dealers in the presidency towns and in a few up-country cities, as well as some well-paid officials and salaried servants, whom I would like to see reached by an income-tax, even at a heavier rate than that proposed. But I am aware that the line cannot be drawn ; and rather than involve the far vaster and now heavily taxed agricultural interests in this vexatious and needless supplemental measure of taxation, or tax agricultural capital, I would concede immunity to these very limited classes, and leave them also to the mercies of the provincial tax-gatherer, whose exertions will, in South India at least, relieve the State from all further burdens for Police, Jails, Education, and other important branches of costly administration. I need scarcely add that the modus operandi of this measure of taxation furnishes another most serious objection to its needless continuance. In England there is some morality amongst income-tax assessors and assessees—feeble as this instinct is even there amongst the latter. In this country I am sorry to say that almost universally only the worst instincts are roused and exercised on both sides under the operation of this measure. Any one practically acquainted with the working of the income-tax knows that the whole thing, from one end of the country to the other, is an unseemly and demoralising wrangle between the lower orders of Government officials and the people of all classes ; for, from interested motives, the challenge is carried far below the classes intended to be taxed, and exemption fees are levied by threats far and wide—a wrangle in which the superior orders of Government officials rarely find that they can act as umpires equitably or to their own satisfaction. Bewildering inability to reach the truth, unfair challenge and surcharge, and too often oppression, partiality, and corruption on the one side, are met by disingenuousness and cringing, and too often by lying and bribery on the other. I am perfectly satisfied it is not worth the while of an honourable Government which is deeply interested in the moral well-being of this people, and in the integrity of their public services, to endeavour to recoup more or less the illusory adverse balance of £500,000 in a generous revenue of £50,000,000, at that price in the demoralisation of their subordinate public servants and of the people, which is now most unquestionably being paid in levying the income-tax, as is now done and must continue under the policy of this Bill. The Hon. Sir Richard Temple promises a revival of virtue from his moderation, and from slightly narrowing the apparent field for oppression and corruption, by the higher standard of incomes which he proposes to tax. I can only assure him that such virtuous dreams cannot be realised in this country, where his fiscal measures give such scope for ill-doing alike amongst assessors and assessees. On this score, if on no other, I would most earnestly deprecate a needless continuance of this tax. Its main practical evils lie, not in the rate charged, but in the absence on all sides of qualities for which we must search in vain for the present in this country. To keep up the tax at a smaller rate is merely to maintain all its evils for the sake of greatly diminished returns. To continue the impost that the hands of the establishment may not lose their cunning is to prolong all this wrong and evil under a bitter and hopeless menace as respects the future. But it is chiefly, my Lord, on account of the great development which provincial taxation has attained of late years, and of the increased local burdens which have recently been enjoined on the local Governments by the late measures of the Government of India, that I would ask the Government of India to give brilliancy to the wise administrative policy now inaugurated, and to lighten the fiscal sorrows of the people by a generous renunciation of this futile and vexatious impost. I must not be misunderstood as disapproving either of liberal provincial taxation or of the administrative changes which, I trust, are merely the beginnings of more complete adjustments under stringent central control. The reverse is the fact. But I think that this feature of change, to which I allude, scarcely attracts the attention which it deserves as a whole. The number of Bills about to be brought before this Council for increasing the taxation of populations in respect of whom they legislate should, however, suffice to awaken some interest, if not apprehension, in our minds as to what is before the country—and I hope excite our sympathies. I need scarcely say that the resolution of December last is not a financial adjustment as between the State and the taxpayers under the various administrations of the country, for we can scarcely view as such a resolution by which certain services are transferred to local management, with grants which are, for instance, in the presidency of Madras £55,000 less than these services are costing during the current year—a cost in itself inadequate for the purposes. It is no financial adjustment which assigns about a hundred thousand pounds for the future education of twenty-eight millions, who constitute a steadily increasing revenue of eight millions sterling to the imperial exchequer. The resolution does confer very anxious liberties on local administrations, but it encourages additional taxation for the people, which, unless it be jealously controlled they will find it hard enough to bear with equanimity.

The Hon. Mr. Inglis : I shall vote against the introduction of this Income-tax Bill, because I am convinced, from my experience of its working during the seven or eight years it has been levied, that it is a tax altogether unsuited to the people of this country, and because I am certain that its imposition is attended with many evil consequences, which ought not to be disregarded by any Government. There is probably no member of this Council who has had better opportunities than I have had for forming an opinion on this tax. I have had to assess it as collector, to hear appeals against it as Commissioner, and latterly to note the assessment of the whole of the North-West Provinces as member of the Board of Revenue ; and I have no hesitation in saying, in the words of the Local Taxation Committee, assembled last year in the North-West, when speaking of the income-tax, that it is a tax odious to the people and odious to the officers who have had to assess and collect it. I believe that this opinion is held by every officer who has had to take an active part in its assessment. The causes of this are not far to seek ; the people detest the tax because of the inquisition, oppression, and extortion, which everywhere and always accompany its enforcement ; the officers of Government hate it, because they see all these evil practices going on around them, while they are powerless to put a stop to them. The area of the districts is so large, and the population so great, that it is impossible for any collector to make the assessments himself. He is consequently compelled to employ a lot of underpaid natives to prepare the lists of persons liable to assessment, and has to rely on information which he knows to be false, in order to estimate the amount to be charged on each person. It frequently happens that a collector has not been in charge of a district more than a few weeks, or even days, when he is called upon to assess it to the income-tax. He is consequently in total ignorance of the circumstances of the people he has to assess, and does not know where to go for information on which he can rely, to enable him to form an opinion on the returns sent in. He feels that he is working in the dark; that with the best intentions, and with the most earnest desire to do right, he is probably every day committing the most frightful injustice. It is this groping about in the dark, this uncertainty, this impossibility of obtaining any reliable data on which to base the assessments, which make the tax so hateful to the officers who have to assess it, and to the people who have to pay it. It was just the same with the income-tax of 1860. The returns published afterwards showed that no less than 93 per cent. of the assessments were surcharges, and a surcharge means nothing more or less than a guess made by an assessor on information which is worth nothing. It may be too high, or it may be too low, but no one can tell which it is; at all events, it has no relation whatever to the real income of the work surcharged. The Hon. Sir R. Temple said in his speech on the Budget that a circular had been addressed to the local Governments, asking whether there were any known cases of extortion; and that replies had been received to the effect that none were known, and that the Bengal Government reported only thirteen had been brought to light. This hardly gives a correct impression of the purport of the replies made. What was said was that extortion and bribery no doubt prevailed to a lamentable extent, but that no cases had been specially brought to the notice of Government, and that it was not likely that such cases would be reported, in that a man who had paid to get his name left out of the lists, or who had paid to get no threatened surcharge, was not likely to come forward and state publicly what he had done. The Bengal Government, I believe, replied that the cases of oppression which had come to light were numerous, and that thirteen were sent up as samples for the Government of India to examine. Though the people suffer in silence, it is none the less true that these evils exist; nor is the disaffection and disloyalty engendered the less general, or the less worthy of the very serious consideration of the Government. The Hon. Sir R. Temple has said on several occasions that it is absurd to call a tax unpopular which falls on only 1 in 300 of the population. Now I confess I cannot understand how any one who has given the slightest attention to the objections urged against an income-tax can make use of such an argument as this. It may be true that only 1 in 300 of the people pay income-tax to Government, but it is equally true that of the 299 remaining at least one-half are subjected to the most vexatious and oppressive inquisition and extortion when the preliminary lists are being drawn up, and that a very large number of these men have to pay in order to keep their names out of the list. All this goes on, though the officers of the Government do their best to prevent it. This bribery and extortion seems inherent in the very nature of an income-tax in this country, where the population affected is so large, and the officers of the Government so few. I do not believe that a man can be found who, having assessed a district to the income-tax, will say that he believes it to have been levied fairly, and without a lamentable amount of bribery and corruption. It is unjust to blame the officers of Government because these evil practices exist; they everywhere do their utmost to put them down; they protest against the tax, because they find by experience that these evils everywhere attend its imposition, notwithstanding their most earnest and unceasing endeavours to put a stop to them. It is, I believe, no exaggeration to say that for every man who pays income-tax to Government, twenty pay to get off, and that for every rupee that is paid into the treasury, another is paid to the subordinate native officials; that is, that the natives of India paid last year upwards of two million pounds sterling as income-tax to Government, and upwards of two millions more as bribes. Everywhere throughout the country the people are being demoralised by the tax, everywhere returns are sent in, everywhere the trading classes are beginning to keep two sets of books, one set showing accurately their real transactions, the other containing a carefully prepared garbled account to be shown to the income-tax assessors. How unsuited the tax is to the people of this country, and how heartily it is detested by them, may be gathered from the fact that no native Government has ventured to levy it, and these native Governments are by no means backward in devising new sources of taxation. It is the British Government alone which has the power to force this tax on its unwilling subjects, and the British Government even could levy it only in times of profound peace.

The Hon. Mr. G. CAMPBELL, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, observed that the first prominent feature in this Bill which struck him as distinguished from the English Income-tax Bill and other Bills of the kind, was that the word "property" was omitted in the title of the Bill, that it was called a "Bill for imposing duties upon income," "property" being assigned a secondary place as regards the objects for which the tax was imposed. We know that many communities and political economists have held, and do still hold, that in respect to principle, the great objection to the income-tax was that it imposed a rate equally on labour and on property. It was said, and he thought most reasonably, that income derived from property was a much more valuable possession than income derived from labour. Income derived from property was protected to a greater degree than income derived from labour. Possibly the argument advanced against it would be formidable, namely, that it would put a distinction between incomes on property and labour, and the Commissioner of Inland Revenue had always raised a departmental objection as regards the difficulty of carrying out a distinction of that kind. Individually his Honour thought there was good reason for this in England. But when he looked to the state of things in India it seemed to him that these objections were immensely increased, and most obviously so, in the case of Europeans who are earning a living in this country, where Government servants and the independent and other classes of the European community were not permanent residents, having a strong interest in the country, but who come to the country for a term of years, and who realise during those years an abnormal income, and cannot hope to remain for their lives in it, and where, as a matter of fact, they do not remain. As a matter of fact, gentlemen of position remain but a few years, in the hope of making such a use of their income as would enable them to make a provision for their families and for themselves in after-years. It did seem to him that to tax incomes thus derived was to tax, not the income of the year, but the capital set by for the use of his family hereafter. Therefore, he did believe that if there were objections to this form of taxation in England, they were infinitely stronger in this country. We should study the American model, and other municipal taxation, and carefully adjust incidence of taxation, if this tax was to be maintained at all. This brought him to the consideration that, owing to financial considerations and other circumstances, the income-tax had never been properly discussed in the light of day. He was sure, if his memory served him rightly, and certainly as regards late years, that the practice had been that there had been no time for discussion, and that it was introduced late in the session, and that we must pass or reject it. The result has been a sort of stand and deliver. It might be that this state of things had been permitted because people hoped that it would be a temporary measure. But now that we have the tax in a form which probably would be perpetual, he wished earnestly to suggest that it was immensely desirable that the present Bill, before it was passed, should be most fully and thoroughly discussed. He alluded particularly to the honourable member for Bombay and the mercantile members of the Council, who could render much assistance in its consideration, and also by getting information from others outside the Council. In regard to this he alluded to the information which he had obtained from the eminent American statesman, to whom he had already referred, and from whom he had discovered that there were several American gentlemen in the city who were capable of giving great information regarding this tax as imposed in America. Now, one week was much too short a period to overhaul it in a proper manner, and put it into shape, if it was expedient at all to pass it. He was aware that if he proposed to extend the time for the submission of the Committee's report he would be treading on very delicate ground; and perhaps it would not be becoming in him to suggest that it would be desirable for the Committee to sit for a longer period than it was proposed to do. But he would suggest that it would not be unfitting that the Government should accept the suggestion thrown out by the Hon. Mr. Cowie, that this Bill should be passed for one year, but not in the expectation that the Bill would then cease, but with the intention that the Bill might be introduced very early in the next session of the Council, that it might be reintroduced at a time when there was ample opportunity to refer it to a Select Committee, with power to take evidence, and introduce the Bill in a shape as acceptable to the public as any Bill of this kind could possibly be. He would now detain the Council for one moment, in order to suggest an alternative proposal. The plan which he would suggest was this, of passing the Bill for one year in an improved shape. He always had the greatest doubt whether this taxation was fitted for Imperial taxation. It seemed to him that the effect of imposing an Imperial income-tax had been, and was likely to be, both to the local officers and the people, the means of an imposition. The hon. member on the right (Mr. Bullen Smith) had spoken of the effect of the tax as snapping asunder the slight cord of cordiality between the Government and the people. He was bound to say that his experience of many of those questions was that, so far from taxation having that effect, it would have the effect of binding the Government and people together in the most hearty cordiality. But it appeared to him that this tax was more suitable for purposes of local rating than for purposes of Imperial taxation; for although there were difficulties in the way of imposing this tax as an Imperial tax, when imposed as a rough local income-tax on the means and property to be protected of the persons liable to the tax, every man had a sort of interest in seeing that his neighbour paid his due share of the tax, for if his neighbour paid too little, he might have to pay more than his proper share to meet the amount required to be raised by the tax, and the local officers, moreover, would have an interest in the objects for which the tax was imposed, seeing that it was imposed for the benefit of the people of the locality in which it was levied, and not for the purposes of the Imperial Government. Some local officers had spoken as if the Government of India was a sort of alien and hostile and tyrannical Government set over them. The suggestion, then, that his Honour would make was, that if a tax of the sort he had been describing was suitable for local purposes, the Government of India should consider whether it might not be able to make it over to the local Governments, with a proper amount of additional charges, as had been done in the case of other items of account entered in the Budget. It seemed to him that this might be done, and in making over the income-tax to the local Governments, the Government of India might say, "If you do not like an income-tax, it will rest with you to take the responsibility of manipulating the tax, and putting it into shape suitable to the people, or of substituting for that tax some other tax for the purposes for which the income-tax is imposed, and for which it was assigned to you." The only objection he had heard to a plan of this kind for the collection of the tax was that there were some gentlemen sitting here and elsewhere who were in no sense "local officers," but as regards local officers, merchants, and others, the Bill already provided for the determination of their local habitation, and for the taxation of every man in the country. This difficulty of the want of locality could apply only to persons who were connected with the Government of India, and his Honour was quite willing that they should be taxed by some special machinery. If this tax was made over to the local Governments, the responsibility of providing means to meet the charges, on account of which the tax was transferred, would rest with the local Government. If they thought it desirable to extend the tax, they would have the power of modifying, altering, and extending it if it seemed desirable to those with whom the determination of doing so or not rested, because if a particular tax was passed, it could not be repealed without the consent of his Excellency the Governor-General, who by law held the power of controlling the legislation of the local Governments.

A Handsome Gift.—The Maharajah of Pattiala has, we learn, presented the munificent sum of Rs. 5,000 in aid of the Science Association projected by Dr. Mohendra Lal Sircar.

The late Dr. Ogilvie.—Friends and admirers of the late Dr. Ogilvie, of Calcutta, have at a public meeting resolved to erect a tablet to his memory in the General Assembly's Institution in that city.

Wild Beasts in the C.P.—During the last half of the year 1870 there were killed in the Central Provinces 93 tigers and cubs, 232 panthers, leopards and cubs, 111 bears and cubs, 107 wolves and cubs, and 128 hyænas and cubs, at a cost to Government of Rs. 4,452·8 annas.

Medical.—Dr. A. Neil has been appointed to the Professorship of Anatomy and Physiolggy at the Lahore Medical School. Dr. Neil is said to be facile princeps in his speciality, and the vigour and ability of his teaching will, it is expected, soon be felt in the Medical School.

Raid into Assam.—We regret to learn that some of the Naga tribes have made a raid into Assam. So far as we can ascertain, the raiders were not in strength, but it is evident that the entire North-Eastern frontier is in a most unsettled condition, and that vigorous measures alone will restore quiet.

Torpedoes.—The Torpedo Committee were to make an experimental explosion below Fort Point on the Hooghly on March 29. Their Excellencies the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief, and the chief representatives of science in Calcutta, were expected to be present.

Caught at Last.—A reward of Rs. 3,000 was lately awarded in various proportions to a body of Sylhet police for the capture of an old raider, Kanai Sing, Rajpootra, who had been "wanted" ever since 1865. Kanai Sing has been sent to Hazareebagh, where he will undergo confinement.

Lady Napier.—Lady Napier of Magdala arrived in Allahabad at midnight on Wednesday, March 22. On Saturday she continued her journey towards Simla, where she was expected to arrive to-day. During her stay in Bombay her Ladyship was the guest of Brigadier-General Stock; in Allahabad, of his honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

Legal.—A member of the legal profession some time ago submitted a memorial to the Government of India, praying that Attorneys-at Law in the service of Government might be declared eligible for admission to the benefits of the Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund. The Government, we are informed by the Indian Daily News, has declined to grant the prayer of the memorialist.

Opium.—We learn from Calcutta that in consequence of a severe hail-storm in Oude, the estimated opium out-turn of the Lucknow district has been reduced from 1,150 to 1,000 maunds. The poppy cultivation has also suffered in Fyzabad. Hail-stones of the size of pigeon's eggs are said to have fallen freely in both these opium districts.

Indian Candidates for Civil Employ.—The Indian Mirror remarks that the desire of crossing the Kala Pani, to compete for the honours of the Indian Civil Service, seems to be fast spreading among Bengalee youths. About half-a-dozen applications have been received within the last few days by the Director of Public Instruction for certificates of age.

The Moradabad and Roorkee Railway.—It is said that the Government North-Western Provinces has received complete surveys for a railway between Moradabad and Roorkee. The surveys were conducted by Mr. H. F. White, Executive Engineer, and his assistants, Mr. E. L. Hunt and Mr. W. Smart; but there are other railways to be constructed first.—Times of India.

Chamber of Commerce.—The vacancies in the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce caused by the recent departure for Europe of four of its members have been filled up; and the Committee is now composed of the following members:—The Hon. J. R. Bullen Smith, President; B. D. Colvin, Esq., Vice President; Thomas A. Apcar, Esq., G. Whitney, Esq., J. Morrison, Esq., H. Dundas, Esq., and E. C. Morgan, Esq.

Colonel Hopkinson.—It is rumoured here that Colonel Hopkinson is designated as successor to Colonel Fytche in Burmah. We sincerely trust that this is the case. He is an officer of rare talent and great administrative abilities, and in British Burmah, which he knows well, and in which he has spent the happiest and best portion of his life, he would prove the "round man in the round hole." In Assam, which he dislikes to the last degree, his detestation for which he ostentatiously avows, and the time spent in which he regards as penal servitude, he is decidedly angular and out of place. We, therefore, again repeat that we hope the rumours of his promotion to Burmah are true, and it will remove the difficulty hitherto felt of making Assam and the eastern districts into a Chief Commissionership; and with such an officer as Colonel Agnew at the head of the administration, the province would make greater strides in a year than it has hitherto done in a decade under the step-motherlike Government of Bengal, even when directed by such a conscientious and well-intentioned Lieutenant-Governor as Sir William Grey.—Englishman.

The "Englishman."—Mr. G. W. Barclay, M.A., formerly head of one of the branches of the Government Telegraph Department, and son of Surgeon-Major Barclay, Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals, Hyderabad, is to edit the Englishman in the absence of Mr. Saunders. Mr. Barclay was for two years a leader-writer on the principal Madras paper, and from what we ourselves know of his literary talent we feel justified in congratulating our contemporary on obtaining his services.—Pioneer.

The Loshais.—Ruttan Pooea, the Loshai Chief who has continued in apparent friendship with our officers for many years, has applied for help against the hostile clans, who, he declares, are about to take their revenge upon him for his friendship. In answer to his appeal, a police force has been sent to his assistance from Kasalong, and thus another step has been taken towards the permanent occupation of a fortified position at the Demagiri Falls, which had been previously advocated so warmly in many quarters.

Cattle Plague in Assam.—An extraordinary outbreak of cattle disease is reported from Golaghat, Assam. On the 26th December last a herd of buffaloes was brought up from Bengal, and passed through the Namlighur tea factory. About two days afterwards a disease broke out among the pigs belonging to the coolies, every one of which, some forty in number, died. It next spread among the factory cattle, and continued to rage up to the 28th January, by which date one hundred and thirty-seven head of cattle had died. Since then no deaths have occurred.

The Transport Service.—There is one item of military expenditure touched upon in General Norman's excellent financial analysis of the Indian Army Bill for the past year which deserves instant attention and correction. As a bit of senseless extravagance, it is solely chargeable against the Home authorities, who make India pay for the patronage and political capital it affords to the Admiralty. We allude to the transport charge of £400,000 for the carriage of, let us say at hazard, some 4,000 soldiers, moved to and from this country during the last year, being at the rate of £100 per man. With all possible respect for the half-pay officers of H.M.'s navy, whom it is desirous to employ actively, this does appear to our poor understanding a somewhat over-high figure to pay.—Englishman.

Military.—We regret to hear of the death at Umballa, on the 23rd May, of Major C. N. McMullin, Bengal Staff Corps.—On the approaching departure of General Fordyce for England, Major-General Beatson will officiate for him in the command of the Sirhind Division; it is not yet known who will replace General Beatson in the divisional command at Allahabad.—The troop of the 6th B.C., commanded by Lieutenant Fletcher, which came here to do escort duty to the Maharajahs of Jeypore and Puttiala, returns to Cawnpore now that its mission is over. The 13th N.I., or a portion of it, has arrived at the fort, taking the place of the right wing of the 22nd, which has gone to Dacca. Captain Lockwood, most energetic and popular of aides-de-camp, has been obliged to take leave, owing to ill-health, and his place is to be supplied by Lieutenant Gordon, of the artillery.—Allahabad Pioneer.

Lady Durand.—We have much pleasure in being able to announce that the Secretary of State and Council of India have resolved to confer a pension on Lady Durand. We trust that the amount will be liberal. Sir Henry Durand died in the service of his country as truly as if he had fallen in battle. The purity of his nature and the unselfish independence of his career long denied to him that recognition of his fitness for the highest offices which would have enabled him to make a suitable provision for his family. But a generous pension may be justified on the far higher ground that, even had he left such a competence as he would have done, had he been appointed to the Punjab when Lord Elgin wished, India owes to his memory a debt of gratitude which pensions cannot discharge. When last mail left Mr. Kaye, of the India-office, and Dr. George Smith were arranging for the formation of a small and influential committee to co-operate with the Durand Memorial Committee in Calcutta.—Friend of India.

Mr. C. K. Dove.—Among the passengers by the Baroda yesterday is one whom we cannot permit to leave India in inglorious silence. Measured by the only true standard, that of usefulness to the public, the long and meritorious services of Mr. C. K. Dove, our late postmaster general, claim a much more distinguished recognition than it is in our power to accord them. Entering Government employ as an assistant surveyor on the Great Trigonometrical Survey in 1833, Mr. Dove gradually rose through his own capacity, energy, and application to that high position in one of the most important departments of the State in connection with which his name has been of late years so familiar to us. His services during the Mutiny in restoring postal and telegraphic communications in the disturbed districts are too well known to need more than a passing reference; and the great and steady improvement that has of late years taken place in the efficiency of the postal arrangements in Bengal is in no small measure due to his exertions. Few public servants retire from public employ with so large a store of good wishes as, after nearly forty years of service, Mr. Dove carried with him yesterday.—Englishman, March 28.

Civil.—In Nagpore it is rumoured that Mr. Morris, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, is to be made the Chief Commissioner of Assam, and that Colonel Keating will be permanently appointed to the Central Provinces.—Colonel Willoughby Osborne has returned to his appointment at Bhopal, and Colonel Thompson returns from Bhopal to Indore.—We learn that the Hon. Ashley Eden has been transferred from the Bengal Secretariat to act for General Fytche as Chief Commissioner in British Burmah.—The Englishman hears that Mr. S. C. Bayley will, in all probability, succeed to the Hon. A. Eden's appointment as Secretary to the Government of Bengal.—There has been a report that Mr. Eden would be succeeded in the Bengal Secretariat by Mr. C. H. Campbell, the Commissioner of the Presidency division; but the Englishman says "it is rumoured that Mr. C. H. Campbell, the Commissioner of Revenue and Circuit of the Presidency division, will go home in June next, on account of ill-health. Mr. H. L. Dampier will return to India shortly, and resume his seat in the Bengal Secretariat, when Mr. Rivers Thompson will revert to his substantive appointment as Commissioner of the Presidency division."

Mr. Seward.—On Tuesday (March 21) Mr. Seward left Lucknow, where he had been the guest of the Chief Commissioner for a day or two. He arrived in Agra on Wednesday afternoon. His letter to the Allahabad Club, intimating his inability to attend the dinner they proposed to honour him with, was as follows:—"Government House, Friday, 17th March, 7 P.M. Sir,—An annoying, though I trust not a serious, indisposition obliges me to excuse myself for the failure in my engagement to dine with the United Service Club. Sensible that I should be losing not only a great pleasure but much valuable instruction, I have delayed sending this apology so long as I could indulge a hope that the necessity for it could be avoided. I pray you to assure the gentlemen of the club of my high appreciation of the honour they conferred upon me, and of my deep regret that I am unable to make them my acknowledgments in person at their own table. The efficiency of the Government service in India in all its departments commands my highest admiration, and induces on my part fervent wishes for the welfare, prosperity, and happiness of all those who are engaged in it.—I am, my dear Sir, with great respect, your obedient servant, William H. Seward. The Hon. the Secretary of the U. S. Club." Mr. Seward and his daughters left Agra on Saturday. His health continued but indifferent during his stay there. The party have gone to Delhi.

IMPORTS.—Calcutta, March 29.—On the whole, a moderate amount of business has been transacted in this market during the week, but prices obtainable are still very unsatisfactory, and in nearly every instance they must show a heavy loss to importers. Grey Shirtings: The light makes continue in request at about former rates; 7 lbs. are unchanged; 8¼ lbs. have been in rather more inquiry during the past few days, and prices have an improving tendency. The wide widths continue quite neglected. Grey Jacconets: Low makes have still been dealt in, and other qualities have been in better inquiry since last mail, and we have to note an advance of an anna per piece all round. T-Cloths and Madapollams continue very quiet. Grey Mulls: For 44-inch goods the demand is now satisfied, and prices have taken a downward turn. Other widths are unchanged. White Shirtings and Jacconets have been more freely inquired for, and on the latter an advance of an anna per piece has been obtainable. White Mulls: All descriptions have been in good request during the week, and we have also to note an advance of an anna per piece on these goods. Grey Twist: At the low prices now current for 40's there is some inclination on the part of the dealers to do business, but holders are not free sellers, and generally hold for an advance in present very unremunerative rates. Coloured Twist continues very quiet.

EXPORTS.—Calcutta, March 29.—Saltpetre: We have again to report a falling market, even with the few transactions that have taken place. It is not possible to ship with any hopes of profit at the present high rates of freight. The stock is about 500 tons, and the rate for Five per Cent. Refraction may be quoted at Rs. 6-12, and common at from Rs. 5 to 5-8. Rice: There has been an increased demand for all descriptions during the week, and prices have somewhat hardened. We quote fine table, Rs. 3-2 to 3-4; middling, Rs. 2-6 to 2-10; and Ballam, Rs. 1-13 to 2-1. Linseed: The market has been unsettled during the week, with a downward tendency, but, though this season's crop is known to have been a large one, the holders up-country are standing out for higher rates. The principal shipments have been for America, but, as a rise has been reported in the London Market, English shippers will no doubt soon commence operations at the present rates. Bold grain is quoted at Rs. 4-5 to 4-8; medium, Rs. 4-2 to 4-4; and small, Rs. 4-1 to 4-2. Rapeseed: There has been a good demand for shipment to Europe, and rates have been fully maintained at from Rs. 4-8 for mixed yellow to Rs. 4 for Eastern Bengal. Teaseed: There has been but little doing during the week, but, notwithstanding that the cold season crop is a small one, prices have taken a downward turn. White rules at from Rs. 4-14 to 4-10, and black from Rs. 4-9 to 4-8. Poppyseed: There is only enough seed left in the market to meet local demands, and not a single transaction for exportation was reported during the past week. Raw Silk: The unfavourable news from France has to a great extent checked all business. The sales during the week have amounted to only 31 bales at Rs. 21 per seer for A. M. V., Rs. 21 for B. S. D. R. Kullegunge, and Rs. 17 for middling Jungypore and Commercolly. The unsold stock is estimated at 600 bales, chiefly native Commercolly. Silk Piece Goods: A fall in rates is expected daily, but the business last week was all transacted at previous quotations, although the stocks are large. Prices for Corahs may be quoted at from Rs. 128 to 170 per corge.

Madras.

Tigers.—Mr. Chase, the Collector of Kurnool, notifies that the Madras Government offer a reward of Rs. 300 for every tiger killed on the Nallamalla Hills, in the Kurnool district.

Public Works.—Colonel C. V. Wilkieson, R.E., will, it is said, be appointed to act as Secretary to the Madras Government in the Public Works Department during the absence of Colonel Orr on furlough to Europe.

Medical.—The appointment of Dr. Balfour as Inspector General of Hospitals, Madras Presidency, in succession to Dr. Mackenzie, has caused a good deal of disappointment in the Madras Medical Service, since it is an appointment that gives no promotion to the juniors.

The Loss of the "Veronica."—Madras, March 31.—Judgment in the Veronica case has been given. It is stated that the fire was caused by the proximity of badly stored fish oil to coir yarn. The captain's certificate has been suspended for six months, and the mates' for three months, because the latter stored damp cotton, notwithstanding the remonstrance of one of the crew.

The Mysore Railway.—The Bangalore Herald says:—"The public will be interested to learn that the detailed survey of a line of railway from this to Mysore has been sanctioned definitely by the Supreme Government, and that in all probability the work will begin in October next. The gauge is to be the standard narrow gauge for India, three feet three inches."

Harbours.—Mr. Robertson, the engineer sent from England by the Secretary of State, is engaged in inspecting the coast and harbours of Ceylon. Tuticorin he has pronounced an "excellent" harbour, and one requiring no artificial improvement. Paumben, with a view, it is supposed, to deciding as to the cutting of the channel between Ceylon and India, is now under examination. While in the south of India, Mr. Robertson decided that a light-house ought to be built at once on Cape Comorin, and the harbour of Cochin "improved."

Capture of a Mutineer of 1857.—The Bangalore Herald of the 16th March says:—"We have been informed that a rebel of 1857, on whose head a heavy reward had years ago been put by Government, was caught at Goolburgah on Friday last, and safely lodged in jail. Fourteen years is a long time to evade the doom of the law, but it is instructive to notice how slowly and surely, one by one, Nemesis tracks the footsteps of the rebels, and ultimately hands them over to their fate. It is instructive, too, to notice that several of these men have been captured within the present year. Do they think the time has come for them to emerge from their hiding places on a fresh quest of blood? It looks like it."

Bombay.

Naval.—H.M.S. Forte (Captain Fairfax), carrying the flag of Rear-Admiral Cockburn, arrived at Bombay on March 26 from Trincomalie. She will, we believe, next proceed to the Persian Gulf.

Kolapoor.—There is a dispute in the State of Kolapoor with regard to the succession. Both the "Ranee of Kolapoor" and the wife of the late Rajah—the latter only twelve years of age—claim, each for herself, the right of adoption.

The Convict Whitwell.—It is understood that the Bombay Government do not see their way to transfer the convict Whitwell from Bombay to England, and that his health is such as to make it certain that his life will be the penalty of his connection with the Aurora frauds.

Civil.—We understand that Mr. John Nugent has been appointed Acting Under-Secretary to Government, Judicial Department, in the place of Mr. John Jardine, who goes to Kattywar. The Government has again shown great discrimination in selecting Mr. Nugent for this toilsome post.—Times of India.

Military.—The absorption of the E. Brigade, R.H.A., the fine old Bombay Horse Artillery, is a step greatly regretted by all who know the services rendered by that gallant corps, and is regarded as an injustice to the old Bombay Artillery officers.—The Bombay army head-quarters have been removed to Poona.

Public Works.—The Government of India having declined to furnish funds for carrying on the works of the proposed Bombay Port Trust in the ensuing official year, the Government of Bombay has been compelled to order the suspension of the works now in progress, to close existing contracts, and to terminate the engagement of establishments employed on the works.

The Khandeish Frauds.—The Gunnesh Khind Frauds have now sunk, for a time at least, from public notice, and in place of that prosecution Bombay has now the Khandeish Frauds case to discuss. We explained that some time since three natives were convicted by Mr. Pritchard of fraud with regard to the funds of the famine relief fund in Khandeish. They appealed to the High Court, and one of them was acquitted, but the other two had made confessions, and the Court did not quash their conviction. The prisoners alleged that their confessions had been obtained by torture or undue influence, and thereupon the High Court ordered an inquiry as to the circumstances of the obtaining of the confessions. The Sessions Judge reported that there had been no torture, and five judges of the High Court were engaged for three days in the end of last week hearing counsel on the Judge's report. Mr. McCulloch appeared for the Crown and Mr. Anstey for the prisoners, and as a number of fine questions were raised, including one of Bar privilege, the argument was rather an interesting one. The Court has deferred its judgment on the case.—Bombay Gazette.

Dharwar Cotton Report.—Dharwar, March 20.—A telegram from Liverpool, dated 22nd instant, quotes fair Dhollera at 5⅞d. per lb. There has been very little business doing in these districts during the past fortnight; purchases to the extent of a few hundred candies old Sawginned are reported at a price equal to Rs. 190 to Rs. 195 per candy f.o.b. Carwar. A considerable quantity of cotton has been lately sent forward to the Coast, there being no enquiry for it above Ghaut; a great portion of it however that has gone to Compta for sale is not good quality, and it is difficult now to get good selection from the balance remaining of the old crop above Ghaut, so much so that many of the dealers, in order to complete delivery of cotton previously sold, have been giving new Sawginned in the place of old. New Sawginned is now coming into the market for sale in larger quantities; we have sampled several hundred docras of it, and consider the quality much better than that of last season, we also find it cleaner. A few hundred candies of new Sawginned have been bought lately at a price equal to Rs. 190 to Rs. 195 per candy f.o.b. Carwar, April shipment, which is our to-day's quotations. About half of the crop of Sawginned cotton has been gathered, but not much of the Compta cuppas. We think there will be very little new Compta for sale before the monsoon; the plants are very good, and promise a full yield, but the Compta crop is generally a late one. At Carwar there is no cotton whatever for sale, either new or old, and very little new is expected before the middle of next month. At Compta the stock of old Sawginned and Compta together is 6,000 docras; old Sawginned there, with selection, costs Rs. 190, and old Compta Rs. 165-7-0 f. o. b. Carwar; but dealers accept Rs. 10 lower for lots without selection. The quality of the stuff going forward now to Bombay from Compta is bad, and consists mostly of rejections. A hundred docras or so of new Sawginned have arrived at Compta, and have been bought up on sample orders at Rs. 200. The ship Sanspareil comes to Carwar next week to fill up; about 3,000 bales of old Sawginned have been procured for her.

IMPORTS.—Bombay, April 1.—Grey Goods—Shirtings: The clearances of 40-inch goods are on an increased scale, amounting in all to about 56,000 pieces, and include the following:—3,600 pieces 5¼ lbs., Rs. 3-5 to 3-6; 4,000 pieces 6 lbs., Rs. 4 to 4-2-6; 6,000 pieces 7 lbs., Rs. 4-8 to 4-12; 3,350 pieces 7¼ lbs., Rs. 5-3 to 5-6; 1,000 pieces 8 lbs., Rs. 5-8; 29,000 pieces 8½ lbs., Rs. 5-7 to 6-15; and 200 pieces 9½ lbs., Rs. 7. 10 lbs. are in demaud, with little or no stock available. In 45-inch Cloths the transactions are considerable, the sales reported comprise 500 pieces 7 lbs., Rs. 4-14; 8,850 pieces 8 lbs., Rs. 5-7 to 5-9; 2,650 pieces 9 lbs., Rs. 6-1 to 6-2-6; and 850 pieces 10 lbs., Rs. 6-12. 60 and 54-inch Cloths there is not much doing, the only clearances being 900 pieces 10 lbs. 50-inch, Rs. 6-8 to 6-14; and 300 pieces 11 lbs. 54-inch, Rs. 7-6. The business in T-Cloths shows some increase, but the buying from importers is a good deal restricted by the demand for country made goods. We note the following clearances, 4,000 pieces 26 to 29-inch, 8 to 6 lbs., 10 annas per lb.; 1,500 pieces 5 lbs., Rs. 2-14 to 2-14-6; and 2,150 pieces 7 lbs., Rs. 3-12-6 to 4-12. The demand for Madapollams continues good, at above former rates; the clearances have been 500 pieces 2⅝ lbs., Rs. 1-12; 1,000 pieces 2½ lbs., Rs. 1-12; 3,000 pieces 2⅜ lbs., Rs. 1-14; and 6,750 pieces 3 lbs., Rs. 2-0-3 to 2-1. 5½ lbs. are very scarce, and early arrivals would command paying rates, to-day's value being Rs. 3-11. The demand for Jacconets is still good, 45-inch makes being principally in request, with only moderate stocks. The sales are 1,000 pieces 2½ lbs., 40-inch, Rs. 1-15-6; 2,000 pieces 45-inch, 2⅞ to 2¾ lbs., Rs. 2-5-3 to 2-7-3; 2,000 pieces 3 lbs. to 3¼ lbs., Rs. 2-9-3 to 2-11-3; and 3,000 pieces 3¼ lbs., Rs. 2-10 to 2-13-3; 1,200 pieces 3¼ lbs., 50-inch, Rs. 2-14. In Printers there is little doing, the clearances being 300 pieces 2½ lbs., Rs. 1-13-6; 750 pieces 2⅜ lbs., Rs. 1-15; 900 pieces 3 lbs., Rs. 2-2-6; and 600 pieces 4 lbs., Rs. 3. In Domestics we have to notice a small sale, at 9½ annas per lb. Mulls have been in very good inquiry, at slightly better rates, 7,200 pieces having been sold at Rs. 1-2-6 to 1-2-9. Dhotis of all sorts continue very saleable, at former quotations, the clearances for the week are 2,850 pairs 40 by 45-inch, at Rs. 1-2 to 1-4. Bleached Goods: The demand for almost all descriptions, except Shirtings, continues very good. Jacconets of medium qualities are wanted, and a sale of 3,600 pieces are reported at prices exhibiting an improvement of 1 to 2 annas per piece. Domets are somewhat more in command better prices. Tanjibs continue to be inquired for, and clearances of 4,500 pieces have been effected at the full quotation of last week. Mulls are in small supply, but unchanged in value. Dyed and Printed Goods: The transactions in Dyed Goods are small, with a considerable stock in first hands. The sales of the week have consisted almost entirely of Cambrics, at slightly easier rates. Printed Goods are in heavy stock, prices of most sorts rise in favour of buyers. Turkey Red Goods: The sales in this department are again large, but no further advance has been obtainable, the demand in the bazaar for Mulls, Jacconets, and Cambrics continues. Prints are neglected. Twist: The extremely low rates at present ruling market have attracted the attention of dealers in the bazaar, who have purchased more largely than for many weeks past. 30's Water and 40's Mule must be quoted fully ¼ anna per lb. dearer, at which advance the market closes firm. Stocks of these descriptions are moderate, and with an average consumption demand prices can hardly fail to improve. The higher counts are not in quite so good requests, and quotations are a little lower. In Coloured Yarns we have to notice a slight improvement both in the demand and value of Turkey Red Twist. Metals: There have been a few transactions in Metals, but the business in this department is still of a very unsatisfactory nature. In Copper no sales are reported, stocks are moderate, with prices unaltered. Yellow Metal is in small supply, and sellers could obtain an advance of about ¼ rupee per cwt. Iron is firmly held, and an increased inquiry has been experienced for Swedish, the supply of which is small, at rather higher prices. Some sales of Spelter have transpired at better rates, especially for English, which is scarce. Tin Plates slightly in favour of buyers. Sheet Metals there is no change of importance to notice.

EXPORTS.—Bombay, April 1.—The advanced quotations in Liverpool have enabled the dealers not only to maintain the previously high range of prices, but have induced some few buyers to pay an advance of Rs. 2 per candy for ready cotton, the quotation for future delivery being unchanged. The total purchases reported amount to about 12,000 bales, and consist chiefly of new Comrawuttees, but likewise include some considerable parcels of Broach descriptions, the supply of which is daily increasing. The arrivals from up-country are a little larger in extent, but it appears to be the impression in some quarters that the natives will hold back more of the crop than they did last season, unless prices materially improve. The market is rather quiet at the close. In other articles of export, the only change to notice is a fair demand for Wool at about Rs. 6 per candy in advance.

The following order received from the Government of India, Military Department, is published for general information:—

randum from Col. H. K. Burne, Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, to the Home Department (No. 64, dated Fort William, March 2):—

Para. 2. An officer can reckon his return from furlough only from the date of his arrival at the port at which he may bona fide disembark with the view of proceeding to join his appointment or regiment; and his landing and reporting himself at Madras on his way to Calcutta to rejoin his appointment in Bengal, North-Western Provinces, &c., cannot, the Right Hon. Governor-General in Council considers, be in any sense what is meant by "disembarkation [Furlough Rules of 1868, rule 17] in India," even though the officer should belong to the Madras Presidency.

Rivers Thompson, Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

The papers will be prepared and the marks assigned not by divisional committees, but by a special committee appointed by the Hon. the Lieut.-governor, and acting under the general control and supervision of the Central Committee.

Thus the duties of the divisional committees will be confined to assigning marks for the following subjects:—

And one of their members will be present throughout in the room where the written examination is conducted, and transmit, under sealed cover, to the Secretary, Central Committee, at the conclusion of the examination, the papers of each candidate, together with his qualification report and abstract of decisions, and the report of the Divisional Committee in regard to the subjects above specified.

Leave and Allowances—Engineer Officers, Public Works.

March 9, No. 1,337.—The following Resolution is published for general information:—

No. 2,197, Fort William, April 24, 1868.

Read the following document:—

Extract from Proceedings in the Public Works Department No. 509E, dated March 23, 1866, forwarding an application from the Government of Bombay that engineers employed under Municipal Committees which manage local funds in the Bombay Presidency may be graded with the Imperial Public Works Establishment, so as to be eligible for pension from the general revenues, while their pay will be disbursed from the local funds on the establishment of which they are employed.

An endorsement of the Home Department No. 23, dated June 4, 1866, on a letter from the Government of Bombay, recommending that all masters of schools under the direct control of the Department of Education should have claims to pension from the general revenue, though they be paid from local funds.

An endorsement of the Home Department, No. 755, dated May 30, 1867, on a letter from the Chief Commissioner of Oude, forwarding a letter from the Director of Public Instruction in that province, urging that if service as a teacher in a school maintained from a local cess be not allowed to count towards pension, at least such teacher may be allowed to reckon his previous service in a school maintained from the general revenues, in the event of his re-transfer to another school maintained from those revenues, so that the break caused by the intervening service in a local cess school may not operate to his prejudice.

Home Department's endorsement No. 2,164, dated July 11, 1867, on a letter to the Government of Bombay, giving cover to a despatch from the Secretary of State for India, No. 29, dated May 24, 1867, authorising the introduction of a Bill into the Council of the Governor of Bombay for the levy of an anna cess on the land revenue in all districts where the population might agree to it as a voluntary contribution for educational and other purposes of local improvement.

Letter from the Government of Bombay, No. 3,444, dated Oct. 7, recommending, in the event of rejection of the proposition received with the Home Department's endorsement, dated June 4, 1866, that all Government servants of the Educational, or any other department, who have been or may be permitted to take employment in offices paid from local funds under Government control, may be subjected to a reduction of three or four per cent. from the pay which they receive wholly or in part from the local funds, and be permitted to count towards pension from the general revenue all time spent in such service, during which the proportional deduction that may be fixed is duly paid to Government by the local funds.

Resolution.—The Governor-General in Council observes that the questions referred by the Government of Bombay depend on the stability of the local funds of that Presidency, and the anna cess on the land revenue being the chief or most important source of income of those funds, orders on the question should not be passed before receipt of the Secretary of State's despatch recognising and assenting to the levy of the cess.

2. The rulings of the Home authorities and the Government of India respecting the pensionary claims of persons employed under Municipalities or in Establishments maintained from local funds are stated in the accompanying memorandum. There is no objection under those rulings to the pensioning of persons in otherwise eligible grades who may be employed in establishments controlled by Government and paid from local funds, provided that the pensions be paid from the same source from which those persons received their salaries.

3. This proviso makes it indispensable that the income of the local funds which incur this liability for pension should be derived from taxation like the cesses on land revenue, for education, roads, &c., or from other permanent sources, like those of the Bengal Amalgamated District Roads' Fund, and not from charitable donations, or voluntary and revocable contributions like some of the contributions for schools, which are comprehended in local funds under a loose acceptation of the term.

4. In the same view it is indispensable that the local funds should, as to the sources of their income, be under the control of Government, although Municipal Committees may, as in the interior of the Bombay Presidency, be employed to administer the funds.

5. The eligibility for pension from the source from which salary is paid of persons employed on establishments maintained from such local funds as fulfil these two conditions is recognised by the rulings in the accompanying memorandum, and it may be provided for in such a way as to facilitate transfers of persons from establishments paid from local funds to those maintained from the general revenues, and vice versa.

6. The Governor-general in Council is accordingly pleased to rule—

I.—That persons employed in establishments that are maintained from local funds which fulfil the two indispensable conditions above stated shall be eligible to pension under the Uncovenanted Service Pension Rules, on the understanding that when the service has been rendered wholly on those establishments, the pension shall be charged to those funds.

II.—That where a person has served partly in the establishments appertaining to the local funds above described, and partly in establishments paid from the general revenue, the pension shall be charged to the local fund and to the general revenue in the proportion of the total receipts of the applicant from those sources during the whole course of his service.

III.—That the pension or portion of a pension which may be payable from a local fund under the two preceding rules shall be the first charge on the fund, so that provision to meet it shall be reserved before other expenditure of the year is defrayed from the fund.

IV.—That the pension, if payable partly from the general revenues, shall, during the course of the year, be disbursed wholly from those revenues, which will be recouped at the end of the year by the proper contribution from the local fund from the sum to be reserved for the purpose under Rule III.

V.—That where the strength and pay of an establishment are fixed with the sanction of the Government of India, pension for service on such an establishment shall be charged to the general revenues, although a portion of the cost be defrayed by a contribution from a local fund, unless a debit of a part of the pension to the local fund be ordered in regulating the fund's contribution.

7. The Engineer Officers employed under Municipal Committees in the interior of the Bombay Presidency may be graded with the Imperial Public Works Department, on the understanding that their pay will be disbursed wholly from Local Funds, that their pensions will be adjusted under these rules, and that the income of the Local Funds will be secured by the levy of the anna cess, for which permission to legislate has been accorded by the Secretary of State.

The Governor General in Council is pleased to rule that any service under Local Funds, which may, under the Resolution No. 2,197, dated April 24, 1868, count towards pension, may also count towards leave under the Leave Rules for Uncovenanted Servants.

2. In cases of leave granted in conformity with this Resolution, the leave allowances shall be chargeable against the Local Fund from which the service is paid.

3. In the case of leave granted to an Officer who, after serving in any Local Fund Establishment under the circumstances stated in paragraph 1, has been transferred to an Establishment paid from the general revenues, the leave allowances will be charged against the local fund and the general revenues in the proportion of salary disbursed from these sources respectively during the service qualifying for the leave.

Staff Corps Examination Rules.

In the Gazette of India, dated March 18, 1871, the following approved rules for the examination of probationers for the staff corps are published:—

The Governor-General in Council observes that the draft rules have substantially been accepted by all the officers and heads of administrations consulted. Certain slight alterations have been suggested, most of which have been approved by the Governor-General in Council, and are embodied in the rules herewith issued.

2. Objections, however, have been in some quarters brought forward to some of the text-books now in use, viz., to "Maine's Ancient Law," and "Austin's Province of Jurisprudence Determined," and "J. S. Mill's Political Economy," as being too advanced and abstruse for such examinations as are contemplated in these rules. The Governor-General in Council, considering that there is much weight in these objections, has determined, as far as the examinations conducted under the authority of this office are concerned, to substitute for the above the following text-books:—"Bentham's Theory of Legislation," published by Messrs. Trubner, London, 1864;" "Fawcett's Manual of Political Economy."

Rules for the Examination of Probationers for the Staff Corps of the Administrations and Branches of the Service under the Control of the Foreign Office.

Under the terms of paragraph 5 of Notification in the Home Department, No. 3,101, dated Oct. 5, 1864,* the following instructions are issued for the conduct of examinations, without passing which, under paragraph 3 of the above notification, a probationer cannot be permanently appointed to the staff corps.

This department is concerned with two classes of such probationers:—1. Those employed in the Civil Administration of the Punjab, Oude, Central Provinces, British Burmah, Hyderabad Assigned Districts, and Mysore. 2. Those employed in the Political Department.

1. The subjects and books for the examination of the first of the above classes will, from November 1 next, be as follows:—Indian History—The last edition of "Marshman's History"—Political Economy—"Fawcett's Manual"—Jurisprudence—"Bentham's Theory of Legislation" (Trubner, London, 1864).

2. Half-yearly examinations in the above subjects will, as laid down in paragraph 4 of notification in home department No. 3,101, dated Oct. 5, 1864, be held in April and October of each year.

3. The head (lieut. governor, chief commissioner, resident, or agent to the Governor general) of the administration will, not less than a month in advance, fix the exact date on which, and the place where, the examinations will be held; will publish the same in the local Gazette, if there be one; and send notice to all officers liable to examination.

4. Not less than a fortnight before the date fixed for examination, the head of the administration will appoint a committee for the conduct of the examination, to consist of not less than two officers.

5. Such committee will frame papers of questions [to be not less than eight or more than twelve] on each of the books above mentioned.

6. The candidates will be allowed three hours to answer each set of questions.

7. To each question a number of marks will be allotted, to amount to about 100 in the aggregate. To pass the examination in each particular subject, it will be necessary that the candidate obtain 60 per cent. of such aggregate maximum number of marks.

8. When the examination is concluded, the committee will submit to the head of the Administration—(1.) The questions andanswers. (2.) A schedule of the marks attained by each of the candidates, in the prescribed form.

9. The head of the administration will consider the recommendation of the committee, will decide whether the several candidates have or have not passed the required test, and will report his decision to the Foreign Secretary withiu one month from date of examination. If, in his opinion, any officer has passed "with credit," or "with great credit," he will state this in the report.

10. He will, at the same time, furnish a statement of all officers liable to examination in the prescribed form.

11. As prescribed in paragraph 7 of notification dated Oct. 5, 1864, in home department, "every officer in civil employment will, in addition in the above examination, and notwithstanding his appointment to the staff corps, be required to undergo the local and departmental examinations prescribed for covenanted civil servants in the province in which he is serving."

12. For the second of the two classes of officers above-mentioned, the tests are the same as above, and they are in addition required to pass an examination in—(1) "Wheaton's International Law;" (2) "Aitchison's Treatise," more particularly those portions relating to the province in which the officer is serving; (3) The Persian language.†

13. For the examination in the first two of the above subjects, rules 5, 6, and 7, above detailed, will apply.

14. For the examination in the Persian language two papers will be set:—(1) A passage of Persian to be translated into English; (2) a passage of English to be translated into Persian.

The candidate will also be required to hold with moderate fluency a conversation in Persian with some proficient in that language, to be appointed by the committee. He will also be required to read a Persian manuscript with a fair amount of facility.

15. To each of the above four tests a maximum of twenty marks will be allotted, and the attainment of not less than forty-five marks in the aggregate will entitle the candidate to pass.

16. For the rest, rules one to four and eight to ten above specified, will, mutatis mutandis, apply to the examination of this class of officers.

* Subject to such general directions as shall from time to time be given by the Government of India, the examinations will be conducted by a committee acting under the orders of the Lieutenant-governor, or Chief Commissioner, or Political Agent, or Resident, as the case may be.

† Under paragraph 4 of the above notification, the production of a certificate to show that the candidate has elsewhere passed an examination in Persian will exempt him from examination therein.

In British Burmah the test will be the higher standard in Burmese.

POSTINGS OF OFFICERS.—The attention of Indian officers is called to the following War Office G.O.:—"When applications are made to the Adjutant-general for the exchange of an officer from one battalion to another of the same regiment, certificates are to be transmitted showing that they do not intend to sell out or retire upon half-pay after effecting such exchange, but that it is their bona fide intention to join and do duty immediately the leave of absence, which may have been granted to either or both, is cancelled by the exchange."

EXAMINATIONS IN THE NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The undermentioned are reported to have passed the required examination in Hindustance:—Mr. A. C. Rogers, assistant engineer, 3rd grade, attached to the Mahanuddy division, passed in Colloquial Hindustance on March 9. Mr. F. Taylor, assistant engineer, 1st grade, attached to the Hidgellee division, passed in the Departmental Standard on Feb. 6. Lieut. S. J. Lambert, R.E.; Private W. Johnson, 11th Hussars; Ens. W. The rules are first to be allotted to officers whose leave has appeared in G.O.C.C. and a sufficient number retained for officers immediately proceeding on privilege leave; any excess number of rules to be returned to this office, to meet further requirements for other divisions or districts, and general officers are therefore requested to return any copies of the rules, or to make further application for additional copies, by the 1st May at latest.

The story of the mutinous proceedings in the 19th Madras Native Infantry has been fully confirmed by the latest Calcutta telegrams. Lord Napier, the Governor, has found the regiment guilty of gross insubordination early in February last, when they were under orders to embark for Singapore. The refusal of the Sepoys to embark without the two months' advance of pay usual on such occasions was followed by the arrest of several who openly persisted in their refusal. The rest of the regiment was then paraded by their colonel, who addressed them and ordered them to disperse. This they refused to do unless their comrades were released, and the colonel yielded to their demand. This concession and "the want of forethought in not providing for contingencies"—we quote the words of the telegram—were strongly condemned by Lord Napier. If the want of forethought refers to his neglect in not procuring the usual advance of pay, the Colonel could not be too strongly condemned, seeing that such neglect provoked the mutinous outbreak which the Colonel could only allay by a weak concession to a not unjust but quite unmilitary demand. The Governor's orders are that the First Company, which was the most culpable, shall be brought back to Madras and dismissed the service, and that some officer, described in the telegram as Commandant Wing, commandant and adjutant, be removed from his appointments. There is no such officer as "Commandant Wing" in the regiment, but there is a Wing Officer, Lieut.-Colonel Fletcher, and the Adjutant is Lieut. Atkinson. The true reading perhaps is that the Commandant, the Wing Officer, and the Adjutant are to be removed from their posts. Mutiny, we suppose, must be punished; but it is sad to think that so many men in a regiment which has hitherto "borne an excellent character" should have been so cruelly provoked to their undoing by somebody's "want of forethought."

ASSOCIATION IN AID OF SOCIAL PROGRESS IN INDIA.

Our readers will remember that in September last, during the visit of Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen to Bristol, at a meeting held in the Park-street Institution, an association was inaugurated under the title of the Indian Association, for the carrying out of the following objects:—To promote by voluntary effort the enlightenment and improvement of our Hindoo fellow-subjects; to extend a knowledge of India, and interest in her throughout our country; and to co-operate with enlightened natives of India in their efforts for the improvement of their countrymen. From the fourth number of the Journal of the Association, which contains much useful information, we learn that the following work has been already done in connection with the Bristol Indian Association:—A large box has been forwarded to Barahanagar, Calcutta, containing educational apparatus for the girls' schools; a number of books for the public library; a box containing ladies' work and toys for children from Southampton, with various articles from Bristol friends, as presents for native ladies and school children. Similar boxes are being sent to Bombay and to Kurrachee, Sind; they contain maps, diagrams, and boxes of lessons on objects and other educational apparatus, procured from the Depository of the British and Foreign School Society, and from James Reynolds, 174, Strand, whose beautiful illustrated diagrams and pictures are little known in India, but are highly appreciated where they have been introduced. They contain also beautiful specimens of ladies' work, and toys for children, scrap books, pictures, and illustrated magazines, such as "The Animals' Friend," "The British Workman," "The Band of Hope," "The Children's Friend," and the "Infant's Magazine." These are contributed by friends in London, Edinburgh, Leeds, and Bristol, as tokens of sympathy with their sisters in India. Sewing parties have been formed in the two last-named places to make articles for transmission. Copies of the Illustrated London News, the Graphic, and the Daily News are being forwarded to native correspondents in Barahanagar, Nagpore, and Ranchi by members and friends of the Association. A grant of £20 has been made by the committee in aid of the work which is being carried on at Ranchi, to improve the condition of the lowest orders. Correspondence has been commenced on behalf of the Association with English and native gentlemen in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, and various other parts of the Indian Empire. Much information has been received, and valuable papers communicated, which will appear in the Association's Journal. Communications should be addressed to the honorary secretary, Miss Carpenter, Red Lodge-house, Bristol, by whom articles will be received for transmission to India, and information afforded, and where the Illustrated London News or other periodicals will be acceptable.

Last evening a lecture was delivered, in connection with the Association, at St. Paul's Lecture-room, Clifton, by Mr. Itludus Prichard, an Indian barrister, on the subject of "Social Progress in India." Mr. Lewis Fry presided, and, in introducing the proceedings, remarked that no one could fail to see that there was a growing desire on the part of the people of England to recognise the duties which this country owed to India, whose claims on England were very great. And it was very pleasant and appropriate, with the view of obtaining knowledge on the subject, that the audience should welcome there that night a son of a former great ethnologist of this neighbourhood, Dr. Prichard. Having recapitulated what had been done by the Bristol branch of the Indian Association, as stated above, Mr. Fry contended that the work of the Association should go on side by side with efforts of a more directly religious character. Mr. Prichard, in the outset of his lecture, spoke of India as constituting a subject of a study for a lifetime, and said when they considered the political, social, or financial conditions of India, they were considering the condition of a sixth of the human race. With the view of arousing public attention, and exciting interest amongst the people of England in the condition of India, the lecturer then showed what a vast field of inquiry it presented for the philosopher, the poet, and the artist, and for persons interested in trade and commerce. He regretted, however, that its resources and value were not recognised by the people of England. Having stated that he intended to avoid altogether the almost fathomless sea of Indian politics, Mr. Prichard said he could not give a sketch of the social condition of India because of the difficulty and magnitude of the task; all he could do was to suggest lines of inquiry and thought to be followed out by those who heard him. There was at the present time, he said, amongst the two hundred millions of India a movement of thought going on the result of which could not possibly be foreseen, and the importance of which could not possibly be overlooked. The movement arose partly from the spread of Western civilisation, and was partly indigenous and spontaneous. He believed when the old fetters of idolatry and superstition were once thrown aside they would never be resumed. Having given his opinion that it was a mistake to suppose that the political, so ial, and religious life of Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras gave a correct view of the feelings of the Indian empire, the lecturer pointed out what was doing in India to overturn superstition by education, by training colleges and boarding schools, and the introduction of athletic sports and manly games. Great results, he said, could not be expected till greater means for the importation of instruction were provided. They wanted hundreds of vernacular schools all over the country, started by private enterprise and self-supporting. While recognising the great importance in effecting social reforms of the Christian missionary, Mr. Prichard observed that in the operations of the large missionary societies in India an important principle—the necessity of adapting means to the end, was too much ignored. No difference was made in the intellectual calibre of the agents sent to the heathen and those sent to the learned and astute Hindoos, many of whom were a match for the wisest Englishman. The lecturer then showed what was being done by the press, the steam engine, and discussion classes to undermine the superstitions of the natives of India, and he called on the educated classes of England to foster and guide the work. Female education offered an inexhaustible field for philanthropic labour. The education given at present was not worth much; nor was the existing machinery adapted to the necessities of the case. What was wanted was an extension of Zenana teaching by English ladies or trained native women. The Indian Association would do well, he thought, to develop this system. Self interest and a sense of duty should lead the English to support the work to which the Association had set itself. This work did not at first require a large amount of money, so much as enthusiasm, energy, and judgment. The first thing was to remove some of the dense mass of ignorance that prevailed in England as to India. British Christians, while they gave the natives of India an opportunity of embracing the truth, should not, he thought, withhold from them the advantages of civilisation till the slow progress of concession was completed. On the motion of Mr. W. Terrelly, seconded by Mr. Ford (barrister), thanks were voted to Mr. Prichard for his lecture. His kindness was also acknowledged by several Indian gentlemen present, by whom approving mention was made of Miss Mary Carpenter's efforts to promote female education in India. The usual compliment to the chairman closed the proceedings.—Bristol Times and Mirror, April 14.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to consider and report upon the Finance Administration of India sat for the fourth time on Tuesday, the 18th inst, the Right Hon. A. S. Ayrton, M.P., in the chair.

Mr. J. H. Morris, who, during a course of twenty years, has held judicial offices at Allahabad and the Punjab, and is now Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, was the first witness called. His testimony in the main applied to the land settlement system of the Central Provinces. First explaining the nature of land tenure in Nagpore, Berar, and the Saugor and Nerbudda territories down to the time of the erection of Nagpore and the adjacent States into the "Central Provinces," administered by commissioners appointed by the Indian Government, the witness then described the working of the present settlement, under which the land was distributed and assessed. The Central Provinces contain an area of 114,718 square miles, and a population of rather more than nine millions. There were now about 15,000 square miles of waste land, one-fifth to one-sixth of which had come into the possession of the Indian Government. There were two settlements in operation in the Central Provinces, one of twenty years, the other of thirty years. The permanent land settlement of Bengal had been enforced under Sir Charles Wood's Order in Council of 1862, and done much harm. The effect of the re-settlement had been to materially increase the revenue from the land. It had arisen chiefly from the taking up of the waste lands. The reclaiming of the forests had largely added to the revenue. A considerable revenue arises from letting out the waste lands. In the Nimar district, placed under the twenty years' settlement of 1860-61, the land having been re-assessed, had yielded a handsome revenue. Large quantities of forest land had been reclaimed on the Nagpore Hills, and rendered cultivable. When the terms of the re-settlement shall be completed, in 1885, the increase to the revenue will show large profits over expenditure. Meantime the working of the settlement has to meet with some opposition. Our mode was to put up the land to auction. These auctions do not meet with the general approval of the native proprietors. The witness was asked a number of questions respecting the minerals of the Central Provinces. He replied that there was much mineral wealth in the country. By the rules of the settlement the Government reserved its right to any minerals that might be discovered. The future of the Central Provinces in respect to minerals was most promising, as the discovery of coal in Chanda and Wurdah showed. Reverting to the general question of the productiveness of agriculture in the Central Provinces, the witness anticipated improvements through the introduction of railways. The nearest railroad that approached them reached the Nagpore province. The want of more railways, roads, and canals limited the productiveness of the country. Future increase in the revenue will depend on the rise in prices which greater facilities of transit and railway communication will promote. The employment of capital upon agricultural improvements will be another means of increasing production. The producing power of the land was gradually increasing, and it would be advisable to encourage its development, and not to check it by enhancing the assessment. It was not justifiable that, because the proprietors and cultivators improved the land they occupied, and rendered it of more value, they should be additionally taxed, as an hon. member of the committee had suggested. The tenants at will are the main contributors to revenue.

The witness, in reply to the question, Would it be proper for the Government to undertake works of irrigation, replied, "Certainly." It would soon pay probably 3 or 4 per cent." Asked, "if it would be fair in return for the introduction of irrigation works to impose a tax in the shape of water-rate or road cess;" considered that taxation ought to be employed with great reserve while a country was being allowed to develop its resources, as the Central Provinces were actually now doing. Questions followed respecting scientific modes of assisting agriculture. The witness said he had himself proposed a scheme for the use of manures on the soil, and he also had an irrigation scheme. He believed there was a department of chemistry existing under the Bombay Government. There were model farms in the Bombay presidency; and he thought similar farms might be introduced most beneficially in the Central Provinces. But the experiment would be found costly at first to Government. Model farms set going in the Madras presidency had cost much, but answered well, and they had increased the crops of grain. The attention of the Government should always be directed to the cultivation of that kind of produce the natives of a province were best acquainted with. Irrigation works and roads, if carried out in the Central Provinces, whether by official means or private enterprise, would prove ultimately successful. But it would be well if the Government entered the field first, and by their operations convinced capitalists that such public works were actually required, and would be readily used by the people. In answer to a series of questions and cross-questioning by Mr. Fawcett, M.P., regarding the Government mode of selling land which came under the denomination of the Khas Mehals, the witness explained as follows:—The Khas Mehals are estates on which the proprietary right has lapsed to Government through the defection of rebels, and other causes. There were no Khas Mehals in the strict sense of the term in the Central Provinces, but on a small scale the Government has sold waste land which has lapsed and come into their hands from feudatory sources. [The object of Mr. Fawcett was to ascertain whether the Government had not effected very large sales of land which had come into their hands by lapsing, like the Khas Mehals. When such sales had taken place in the Central Provinces the Government had applied the proceeds of such land sales to revenue, but was it not more just to allow the proceeds of the sales to be funded for the benefit of cultivators?] The witness said, in answer, that the land that had lapsed to the Government through rebellion was the property of the State. The Government sells its right to lapsed waste lands, it being entitled to do so under the settlements in operation.

Replying to Mr. Fawcett, who wished to know to know to what extent the products of the Central Provinces were paid for in silver currency, and what in kind, the witness said the produce was paid for partly in silver but also in material—as piece goods, hardware salt, sugar, &c.

[A long course of examination respecting the exports to th Central Provinces led to the witness reading from an official return of exports; but on its being ascertained that the figures referred to exports in transit through the Central Provinces, it was decided that the paper was not admissible as evidence.]

Returning to the subject of irrigation and the water-rate, some questions were put regarding the construction of a large reservoir or canal, for which a cess had been made. The witness said he had heard no remonstrances against such cess.

The witness's examination closed after some interrogatories regarding the desideratum of developing the mineral resources of the Provinces, and rendering them marketable by improving the modes of transit. This was now immediately necessary in the case of the coal discoveries at Chanda and Wurdah.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Arthur Phayre, K.C.S.I., Deputy-Commissioner of Arracan, and Commissioner of Pegu, was the second witness called. He gave testimony to the working of the settlement regulations on British Burmah. After briefly tracing the nature of land proprietorship and occupancy in British Burmah from the year 1826, he said that the nearest approach to a settlement of the land revenues was the annual assessment made in Arracan, which was introduced about seven years ago. The mode of dealing for agricultural produce was that grain was paid for in produce, other products in money. There were no intermediate village holders. There is an agent for the revenue, who collects the rents at 10 per cent. on the amount. The longest terms of holding that have been granted have been for ten years; but the peasantry generally prefer the annual arrangement. About 3,000 square miles of land are under cultivation, reclaimed from jungle and forest. The forest land, with the exception of the hill portions, are cultivable. There are some 40,000 square miles remaining uncultivated. No revenue is desirable from uncultivated lands. During fifteen years the revenue of British Burmah has been slowly increasing, at the rate of about £5,000 a-year. Large numbers of immigrants come into the country from Siam and Burmah to settle on waste lands. The holdings are small, consisting of grain-fields, garden-land, &c. The Government claim a right of selling land which does not pay revenue. Every immigrant occupier of land is treated as the owner. During the last seven years a cess had been made for roads, education, and rural police, which had been willingly paid. The soil of British Burmah is very good, irrigation is but little required. The want of the country is not for water, but for population. Invitations had been officially made to the Japanese and Chinese to settle in British Burmah, without success. Perhaps an immigration movement would best succeed under private enterprise. British Burmah is a remarkably healthy country, much more so than the plains of Bengal. Arracan is not so healthy as the other provinces. The revenue was considerable from forest land. The forests are entirely in the Government's hands. The trees are felled, and produce an income of from £40,000 to £50,000 a-year derived from the sale of the wood, which is teak. The forests are becoming every day more valuable to the revenue. The teak is found in the hill forests, at an elevation of from 1,200 feet to 2,000 feet. The road and other communications in the country are far from being good. The timber that is floated down the great rivers by owners pays ten per cent. to the revenue. Asked, "Do you regard the taxation in British Burmah as settled?" the witness said the mode of taxation remained still an open question. The present assessment of the land is not considered oppressive by the people, and the revenue from that source will probably year by year increase. The advantage to the revenue would arise from the increase of cultivation. The assessment is made on the head man of every village, who collects from the peasantry, and accounts to the Government collector. Immigrants come in in considerable numbers, but not as agricultural labourers, but to follow timber-cutting and other avocations. Marriages are frequent between the Burmese and the Chinese, which is a source of increase to the population. The holders of hereditary land are not many; there are a few old families with large holdings; but there are no feudal or other deterrents to the cultivation of the land under the British settlement. The Government and the people are always face to face; nothing intervenes to prevent the agreement being carried out, and the land to be cultivated under the protection of the Government, and to the advantage of the revenue. The tenure is similar to the North-Western Provinces. The farms were leased to tenants from the head man of the village. The landowners were those who could prove an hereditary title to the land, or through long, undisturbed, and undisputed possession of waste lands which they had reclaimed by money outlay upon the cultivation, had been allowed to retain their farms as their own. If the owner of a farm could not show a title or prescriptive right to proprietorship, founded on the above conditions, the head man of the village in which the farm was situated became trustee, and as such could grant a lease of it. Below the occupier under leases were cultivators who were neither owners nor lessees, but simply tenants at will. The first land revenue settlement under which the Saugor and Nerbudda territory was assessed was limited to twenty years. It came into operation in 1834. The re-settlement came into operation in 1856, and was for thirty years.

The sitting on Friday commenced with the resumed examination of Sir Robert Montgomery, who advanced much additional evidence on the operations of the land settlements, leases, &c., in the North-Western Provinces during the time of Mr. Bird and Mr. Thomason. The application under Sir Charles Wood's Order in Council of the Permanent Settlement was again discussed, during which it was ascertained that in effect it had become a dead letter; the sales of waste lands had been extremely few, the measure being considered unsuitable to the requirements of the people. There are very extensive tracts of land, but it is of an uncultivable nature mostly. Much of the waste land under the Hon. Mr. Bird's administration had been obtained as grants free from taxation. The witness cited Goruckpore, where the lands and the revenue had both gone on mutually improving. Revenue he had calculated had increased annually at the rate of £8,000, and £240,000 was the total yearly revenue; while—from the whole number of villages in all districts, 20 per cent. increase to the revenue—the percentage in the case of Goruckpore was much more. There the estates had been higher or better cultivated. In the North-West Provinces, as in the other provinces, the land-tax was distinct from local taxes. Road, canal, and such-like cesses were not made under the land revenue settlements, but by municipal rules subject to the Indian Government. There were tea plantations, only a few, and they were assessed like the land. The witness considered that the revenue benefited equally by rise in prices and improved cultivation, the former being a consequence of the latter. The complete assessment of the North-West Provinces had increased from three millions to about four millions. It was derived from the short leases, and long leases were deterrent of revenue. The Talookdar question here occupied inquiry.

Sir Charles Wingfield, M.P., was next examined, who gave evidence of the working of the land revenue settlements and yearly tenancy in Oude. His testimony went to confirm the statement of Sir R. Montgomery respecting the old feud between the Talookdars and the ryots, the ultimate result of which was the protection of the ryots.

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Eastwick, M.P., who was taken suddenly ill in one of the rooms adjoining the House of Commons on Thursday evening and had to be removed to his residence in Thurloe-square, was much better on Saturday.

Export of Bullion.—The only items of Bullion export quoted by De Quetteville's Indian Circular of April 20 are a despatch of silver to Madras to the amount of £3,850, and ditto to Singapore to the amount of £32,200. The price of silver is quoted as bar 5s-03-16d. per oz. standard, dollars 4s. 11½d. per oz., 5 francs 4s. 11½d., per oz.

Oriental Bank Corporation.—The report of the Oriental Bank Corporation for the year 1870 recommends a dividend at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, leaving a balance of £10,096. 0s. 9d. to be carried forward. The balance-sheet shows that the deposits held amount to £11,624,531. 14s. 5d. The notes and bills discounted represent a total of £13,243,915. 18s. 8d., and the reserved surplus fund is £444,000.

Bills on India.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 19th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £295,860, to Bombay, £100,000 and Madras, £4,200. The minimum price was fixed as before, at 1s. 10⅛d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10⅜d. will receive about 3 per cent., and on Bombay at 1s. 10⅜d. about 30 per cent. Those above, in full.

Death of Sir Justin Sheil.—We regret to announce the death of Major General Sir Justin Sheil, K.C.B., who expired after a short illness on April 18, at his residence in Eaton-place. Sir Justin entered the Bengal Native infantry in 1820, and received the medal and clasp for the siege of Bhurtpore. He went to Persia in 1833 as second in command of a detachment of officers and sergeants sent to discipline the Shah's army. In 1848 he received permission to accept and wear the First Class of the Lion and the Sun, conferred upon him by the Shah. In 1844 he was appointed Envoy and Minister at the Court of the Shah, which post he held till October 21, 1854. He was made K.C.B. in 1855, after a very successful career, in which he gave great satisfaction both to his own Government and to that of the Shah. Sir Justin was brother of the well-known Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, member for Dungarvan.

Military Fund for the Staff Corps.—Some time since it was announced that it had been decided to establish a fund for the relief of widows and orphans of officers serving in India in the staff corps. We adopted measures for ascertaining the truth of the rumour, and discovered that the question was under consideration. Several difficulties had, however, presented themselves, and we hesitated to raise hopes which might not be realised. We are bound to say that the authorities were fully alive to the immense advantages which the military funds have conferred on the Indian Service, and although it was impossible on the transfer to maintain these institutions on their then footing, a desire was manifested to establish a fund for the staff corps, including the medical and ecclesiastical services of the three Presidencies, based upon the general features of the old funds. Two of the principal difficulties arose from the various ages at which officers may now enter the service, together with the right of exchanging from the line to the staff corps, and vice versa. These, however, have now been thoroughly investigated, and a despatch has been sent to India recommending the Government to adopt immediate measures for establishing a general fund. —Home News.

The Brindisi Route.—Some time ago we advised persons travelling to India by the Brindisi route to anticipate the mail by at least twelve hours, starting, namely, from Charing-cross by the early train on Friday morning, if not even a day sooner, so as to insure a night's rest at Bologna, and a timely arrival at Brindisi. A letter just arrived from an unfortunate who missed the Brindisi steamer, through no fault of his own, confirms the justice of our advice. The writer tells his story as a warning to future travellers against trying to reach Brindisi by the mail express from Ostend. He got safely enough to Padua, but there all passengers were compelled to quit the train and wait for the next one, whilst the mails went on a-head. The consequence was that they reached Brindisi six hours after the Nubia had steamed away for Alexandria. It appears that the station-master at Padua had only the day before received written orders to let no passengers go on by the mail train to Brindisi, and had actually been scolded for having hitherto acted otherwise. The reason alleged for this vexatious proceeding is that the forbidden train is an express train put on to meet the wishes of the English Government, and never meant for passengers at all. So poor an apology for a good reason could hardly have put the sufferers in a better humour with the authors of their disappointment. The directors of the line might, at any rate, have given due warning of their intention, so that passengers might have been saved the needless annoyance and expense of a week's delay at Brindisi. Fortunately the P. and O. Company's agents have allowed the tickets taken for one steamer to hold good for the next.—Home News.

The Government Rifles of England, France, and Prussia.—At the ordinary weekly meeting of the Royal United Service Institution on Monday, April 17, Captain Mervin Drake, R E., musketry instructor, delivered a lecture on the Infantry Rifles of England, France, and Prussia. Dealing first with the needle-gun, which was patented first in this country in 1835, and adopted by Prussia in 1840, he described its advantages as strength, facility of manufacture, and cheapness; and its disadvantages as weight (10lb. 10oz. without bayonet), clumsiness (requiring two more motions for loading than modern arms), liability to escape of gas, paper cartridge liable to injury, high trajectory, and inaccuracy beyond 500 yards. The Chassepot, on the other hand, though sharing the defect of a weak paper cartridge, possessed the advantages of lightness (9lbs without bayonet) and handiness, with flat trajectory, and capability of great accuracy, though with the present ammunition it is not good at long ranges. The bore is ·433 of an inch, the bullet 380 grains, and the charge of powder 85 grains. The new pattern Martini-Henry, which has now been finally adopted as the future arm of British infantry, is 7¼ inches shorter than the long Snider-Enfield, of 450 bore with a turn of rifling in 22in. The bullet is 480 grains, and the charge of powder 85 grains. On account of the lighter bullet, the trajectory of the Chassepot is flatter and the velocity greater up to 450 yards; but beyond that range the heavier Martini-Henry bullet gains the advantage, and maintains it, with much greater accuracy, to the end of its flight. The weight of the new pattern arm is 8 lbs. 7 oz., and it is provided with a murderous-looking implement, devised by Lord Elcho, which combines, with excellent qualities as a sword and bayonet, the characters of a saw, a bill-hook, and a knife for cutting up meat. The mean deviation of the arm at 500 yards, is ·95 of a foot; at 800 yards, 1·47; at 1,000 yards 2·80; and at 1,200 yards, 3·46. At 500 yards, soldiers are found to fire ten shots per minute, and make good practice. It is hoped that Volunteers will have an opportunity of testing its powers next July, in the second stage of the Queen's Prize.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.—The seventeenth ordinary general meeting was held last week at the London Tavern; Mr. Mitchell in the chair. The report of the directors has been published. The chairman, in proposing its adoption, which he said was, under the circumstances, a painful duty, explained that the usual half-yearly meeting in October was not called because the directors had no dividend to recommend, and because they thought that some discussion might arise which might damage the credit of the bank. He could not account for the undue depreciation in the market price of the shares; the members of the board, who were all large shareholders, were none of them speculators in the shares. They had invited some of the principal shareholders to meet the directors a fortnight ago, at which the fullest explanation of the position of the bank was given, and to go through the accounts with them in order that they might state to the meeting that the accounts were correct, and so avoid angry discussion, which could have no other effect than to injure the credit of the institution in the East. There being a deficiency of £59,000, they were prohibited by their charter from declaring a dividend. One cause of the deficiency was the great depreciation in the exchanges. They had necessarily very large funds employed in the East, and the custom was to take over the capital there to the 31st December in each year, at the rate of exchange of the day, and the depreciation at the end of 1870, as compared with the end of 1869, was no less than four per cent., which necessarily represented a very formidable sum. Another cause was the continuous depreciation in the value of cotton. Again, at Shanghai they had advanced £50,000 on certain goods in bond, a large portion of which had been abstracted without the knowledge of the Bank's agent, and a loss had been thus incurred estimated at £22,000. They had always been as accurate as possible in their estimates of loss—as one instance he mentioned the Batavian loss; the estate representing that advance was on the point of winding up, and the result was that the amount put down in the accounts last year fully represented the loss actually incurred. The present estimate had been prepared with equal care, and if there was any error he believed it would be that they had over estimated rather than under estimated the losses. With regard to the future the prospects of the present year had opened as favourably as any year since the Bank was established, and more so than most. He reminded the shareholders that although they paid no dividend, they had during the twelve years to 1869 paid an average dividend of 10 per cent. per annum, and he saw no reason why they should not do so again. The directors were anxious to carry out economy to the fullest extent, but they had no expectation of being able to effect any considerable saving in the expenditure, having regard to efficiency and safety. The deposits showed a reduction consequent upon the diminution of the rate of interest from 6 to 5 per cent. Mr. John Jones seconded the motion, which, after some questions of no general importance had been asked and answered satisfactorily, was carried unanimously.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LONDON, AND CHINA.—The thirteenth annual general meeting of shareholders was held last week at the Banking-house, in Old Broad-street; Mr. G. G. Nicol in the chair. The report of the directors was taken as read. The Chairman, in moving its adoption, remarked that the figures as regarded assets and liabilities, read, as usual, favourable for the position of the bank. The amount of cash, bullion, and Government securities was in excess of what it stood at the last meeting, which was a favourable feature, as showing that the liabilities were fully covered. There was a falling off of £200,000 in the deposits. That under ordinary circumstances would be a subject of regret; but looking at the state of business for some time past, it was rather one of congratulation. Last year he had spoken with satisfaction upon the increase in the deposits of about a million, but since then such had been the difficulty of employing money profitably in India that a large amount of deposits had been found disadvantageous rather than otherwise. He had previously intimated the intention of reducing the interest on deposits, but inasmuch as a considerable portion of the money had been taken at a fixed rate of interest for fixed periods, the full effects of the change would not be realised until the end of the present year. The same policy would be continued, and the reduction would follow the change in value which money was undergoing throughout the world. Another cause of the unfortunate result of the year in regard to profits was the fall in the rate of exchange in India, in which respect, however, he hoped that before long there would be an improvement. At the last meeting he stated that he anticipated the last half would be better than the first half of the year, and so it had proved, but not to the extent that was expected. The sum written off from the reserve to meet the bad debts of former years it was found had been rather over-estimated at £110,270, and they had now added to it the estimated loss on the debts of the past year at Bombay and Calcutta, about £7,000, which, as compared with the profits of the year, was certainly not excessive, and contrasted favourably with other similar institutions. Upon the whole, he thought they might congratulate themselves that the losses had been so small. With regard to the future, he saw no cause for despondency; on the contrary, he thought they had passed through the worst, and that, with the improvement in the rate of exchange, and the low price of Eastern produce, which must necessarily tend to the advantage of banking, as all other mercantile operations, and the safeguard against losses which the extension of telegraph communication afforded, they might look forward to more successful results. (Hear, hear.) Answering a letter he had that morning received from a shareholder, he denied that the losses sustained by the bank had been continuous. During the last four years they had been trifling, and economy has been carried out to the fullest extent consistent with efficiency. A Shareholder, who expressed himself agreeably disappointed at the declaration of any dividend in the present half-year under the circumstances, seconded the motion. In reply to several proprietors, the chairman said he could not hold out any hope of much being recovered from the overdue debts, nor could he promise that the future profits up to 8 per cent. should be all appropriated to dividend, inasmuch as the directors felt that it was of the greatest importance to reinstate the reserve, which had been trenched upon to meet the losses. The motion was unanimously adopted.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, April 18.—THE QUEEN'S ARMY IN INDIA.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, in reply to Colonel NORTH, said that no answer had yet been received to the telegram relative to the number of regiments of the Queen's army in possession of muzzle-loaders on the 1st of October last. As soon as the report on the subject was in the hands of the Indian Department it would be laid on the table.

CIVIL EMPLOYMENT FOR SOLDIERS.—Colonel BARTTELOT, on behalf of Lord Elcho, gave notice that, on Tuesday, the 16th of May, that noble lord would move: "That, in the interest of the public service, it is expedient that civil employment should be more freely and extensively opened to those who had served in the naval and military forces of the Crown; and that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire how far it may be consistent with efficiency and economy to give employment to such persons in the various departments of the State."

THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Major ARBUTHNOT gave notice that on the 16th of May he should move for a Select Committee to inquire into the organisation of the Royal Artillery, and the practical efficiency of the several branches of that arm of the service.

INDIAN FINANCE.—Mr. FAWCETT, in deferring his motion to call attention to the subject of Indian finance to the 16th of May, gave notice that he should on that occasion move: "That, considering the discontent which exists in India with regard to the financial and general administration of the affairs of that country, it is expedient to appoint a Commission, so that evidence may be taken and obtained in India, both from native and European residents, on the subject."

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, April 20.—FIRST COMMISSIONS.—In answer to Major ALLEN, Mr. CARDWELL stated that the issue of all first commissions, purchase and non-purchase, had been for a time suspended, pending the progress of the Bill. Exception had been made in the case of those candidates for purchase commissions who had already lodged their money and wished to continue.

RECRUITS FOR INDIA.—Colonel SYKES asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether there was not an egregious error in the return to an address of the House of Commons, dated March 14, 1871, No. 129, which stated that the cost per man for drilling and preparing recruits for filling up vacancies in the East India Company's European troops in India for ten years, from 1850 to 1859, both inclusive, was £19. 14s. 10¾d. for 24,783 recruits, while the cost per man at the expense of India for a similar object for the European troops of the Crown for seven years, from 1861-2 to 1867-8, both inclusive, was £205 per man for 15,376 recruits, amounting in 1862-3 to £376 per recruit; and whether it was true that India was to be charged for the future £136. 13s. 11d. for each cavalry, and £63. 8s. 5d. for each infantry recruit, independently of the cost of transit to India.—Mr. Grant Duff: In reply to my hon. and gallant friend, I have to say that there is no error in the return referred to, and, further, that the charge to be made by the Imperial Government against the Indian Government is, under present arrangements, precisely as he states it.

The Shah of Persia.—Mr. Eastwick asked the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether he would state why the request of the Shah of Persia for the services of British officers to discipline his troops, preferred so long back as 1863, and since repeated, had not been complied with; and whether there would be any objection to lay the correspondence upon the table of the House.—Lord Enfield: The Indian Departments of her Majesty's Government have expressed their willingness to allow officers of the Indian Army to be appointed to organise and discipline the army of the Shah of Persia. The question arose on what terms these officers should be appointed; the India-office offered terms which they considered fair and reasonable, to which the Persian Government demurred, wishing to throw all the cost upon our Government. This was not considered expedient, either on financial or political grounds, and the subject, therefore, has remained, and still remains, in abeyance, pending further application from the Shah. I fear that I could not undertake to produce the correspondence in question.

House of Commons, Friday, April 21.—Sandhurst College.—In reply to Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Cardwell said that Sandhurst was at present occupied by gentlemen who had passed their examinations and were waiting for commissions. The experiment so far had been highly satisfactory. It was under consideration whether appointments should first be made to Sandhurst or to regiments.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

LITERARY.—Messrs. Wyman and Co., Calcutta, have just published a book on "Ontology; being a translation of 'Tatwa Vidya,' a Bengali work, by Babu Dwijendra Nath Tagore." The introduction indicates the nature of the work:—True knowledge depends upon the harmony of the two great classes of truth, viz., "particular" and "universal." Sensations give rise to particular truths only. Such concepts as time and space, unity and diversity, cause and effect, and others of a similar kind, give rise to universal truths. These universal truths are purely supersensuous, and are applicable to all objects alike. . . . Without such necessary and universal truths for data, no other truths would be possible. For instance, but for space, the external world would never have come within the sphere of our knowledge; without consciousness, knowable objects would remain unperceived; and without the agency of causation nothing could occur. Necessary and universal truths, therefore, are the ground-work of all knowledge. The science which has for its subject-matter these primary truths is called Ontology. Such truths, in the first place, extend the sphere of our knowledge; secondly, by influencing action, they serve to regulate the will; and, thirdly, they harmonise and embellish the mind, and thus may be regarded from an æsthetic point of view. Hence we shall divide our subject into three parts, viz.:—I. The knowledge of the true; II. The practice of the good; and III. The enjoyment of the beautiful.

Translated from the Original Urdu, by Mrs. WILLOUGHBY-OSBORNE. Followed by a Sketch of the History of Bhopal, by Colonel WILLOUGHBY-OSBORNE, C.B.

This is a highly-important book, not only for its literary merit, and the information it contains, but also from the fact of its being the first work written by an Indian lady, and that lady a Queen.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 8; Agra, April 6; Calcutta and Madras, April 5.

Lord Mayo left Calcutta for Allahabad on the 2nd April, and reached that station on the 5th. After holding a session there of the Viceregal Council, he was to start for Cawnpore about the 8th, and go on thence, after a few hours' halt, to Lucknow. Lady Mayo was expected at Agra on the 13th, and in honour of her coming the Taj was to show forth its exquisite outlines and pure symmetry under the blue lights usual on such occasions.

THE papers teem with the parting speeches of the Council at their last Calcutta sittings of March 31 and April 1. Lord Mayo's temperate defence of his Government was only spoiled by some well-meant but foolish strictures on the Calcutta press in the matter of Sir R. Temple. His idea of getting at the truth with regard to the suffering caused by the income-tax, by means of an official inquiry, attests his faith in the sufficiency of such a process, rather than his insight into native ways. One part of his speech however does equal credit to his earnestness and his common sense. Rulers who are appointed without the consent of their subjects are bound, he said—> to exercise more circumspection than those who derive their powers from popular representation; and a deep obligation is placed upon us to govern with firmness but mercy, with kindness and with care, those weaker natures which are entrusted to our rule.

> In administration, taxation must always form a leading feature. When you touch the pockets of the people, you touch at once their feelings and their hearts. . . . . .
> Our clear duty, therefore, is to refrain from imposing any burden upon the people of this country beyond that which we can honestly say is necessary for good government, and for the permanency of that rule which I believe is calculated to confer benefits upon the nation.

IN his survey of future demands on the Indian Revenue for Public Works, Lord Mayo points out that the irrigation works already sanctioned will cost in all thirty-nine millions, of which three only have yet been spent. The projected railways will swallow up from twenty-six to twenty-eight millions. Ten millions in the next few years will probably be advanced in loans to Municipalities, and the guaranteed railway companies will probably need about eight millions more. All this, with three millions to be lent out under the Land Improvement Act, will make up a total of about ninety millions that must be raised in a few years for indispensable purposes. On all these sources of outlay his lordship pledged himself to enforce the strictest economy compatible with good workmanship. With regard to the question of railway guages, be sho[illegible]ring could be effected by means of the ne[illegible]in., and made very light of the only serious objection to a change of guage—the cost of "breaking bulk."

LORD NAPIER made some brief but pertinent remarks on Major-General Norman's military statement, ending with a decided expression of sympathy with the planters who need protection on the North-Eastern Frontier. On the 1st April Colonel Strachey made a speech against the export duties, which yield only half a million, and some of which bear hard on the few manufactures of which India can boast. On the import tariff he was hardly less severe, which raises £134,000 on thirty-nine out of the whole fifty-four articles taxed. Mr. Stephen's speech on bringing up the Report of the Committee on the Law of Evidence was long and masterly.

NOT the least interesting part of General Norman's military statement were the extracts he gave from Mr. Kellner's retrospect of the war outlay in India during the last ten years. In 1862-3, the first year of reduced outlay after the Mutiny, the total expenditure in both countries amounted to all but sixteen millions. Reduced in the following year by about a quarter of a million, it rose again three-quarters of a million in 1864-5, owing mainly to the Umbeyla Campaign. In that year the whole British force in India amounted to 69,154, exclusive of a local battery, an Eurasian battery, the Sappers and Miners, and other small bodies. Next year the outlay again rose by nearly three-quarters of a million, two-thirds of which was due to the Bhotan War and the Madras Famine. Half-batta was also abolished that year, cantonment batta granted to native troops on furlough, and a second doing duty officer added to each native regiment, while the native army in Madras was reorganised. But for a reduction of two British regiments of foot and seven light field batteries, the expenses would have been yet greater. The strength of the artillery was still equal to about 97 batteries, or 584 guns. Further reductions in the strength of the British regiments, one of which was altogether withdrawn, while a native cavalry regiment in Bombay was broken up, reduced the outlay for 1866-7. In the following year a new charge of 2d. a day added to the pay of each European soldier first appears in the military books. On the other hand, the Hyderabad Contingent ceased to figure therein, and a few batteries were reduced or transferred elsewhere. The increased outlay of 1868-9 was mainly due to the Abyssinian and Hazarah Campaigns. A few reductions took place this year. Further savings were effected in 1869-70 by the withdrawal of two regiments of British cavalry and two of infantry, and by the extinction of the Eurasian Battery. But the process of reduction culminated in 1870-1, when the strength of each regiment of British cavalry was reduced by one troop, of British infantry by two companies, of the Indian artillery by all the regular native batteries, and the Army Staff by several brigadiers and generals of division. One depot was abolished, another reduced; the Governor-General's body guard was done away, and other retrenchments were carried out in the Army Department.

In spite of fresh outlay for cantonment lands in Ranikhet, Morar, and Beejapore, the savings on the whole year reduced the total outlay a good deal below that of any previous year.

In point of numbers the difference between the strength of the Indian armies in 1870 and in 1871 is very small. The 6,545 British officers of the former year are now reduced to 6,436. Twenty British soldiers in all are added to the 60,425 privates and non-commissioned officers of last year. The native troops for this year are reckoned at 121,981, about 120 fewer than the year before. A further reduction in their numbers will probably take place during the year. Each of the nine regiments of British cavalry now consists of 455 men in addition to the officers, and each of the fifty foot regiments of 885 men. In respect of guns and horses however there is a marked difference between the two years. The withdrawal of five horse batteries reduces the total of field guns to 394, and the complement of horses to 13,253, or nearly a thousand fewer than last year. The reduction of guns, according to General Norman, is rather apparent than real, for twelve drivers will be added to each of the remaining batteries, many of which have hitherto been too weak to work all their six guns. It is a fact moreover for which General Norman can vouch as well as Lord Napier, that the recent reduction in guns is "far less than the artillery reductions recommended by high military auth[illegible] 1865, and again in 1869." All this may be true enough, and yet we cannot help feeling with Lord Napier that the last reductions have been ill-advised, for they have reduced the proportion of field-guns to men of all arms below the moderate allowance of three to every thousand.

The charge for Bonus Compensation has risen for the coming year from six to seventeen thousand pounds, a mere fraction of the sum payable under the Guarantee of 1858; a fraction which melts into nothingness in comparison with the £600,000 set apart in this year's Imperial Estimates alone for compensation to officers of the Imperial Army. A new item of outlay is the ten thousand pounds destined to defray the cost of camps of exercise in Bengal. Why not in Madras and Bombay also? General Norman declines to enter into the question of further reducing needless outlay and so strengthening the efficiency of the service by consolidating the Military Departments of the three Presidencies. May we venture to hope that this question will have been properly settled before his next year's statement is ready for delivery?

By that time also let us hope that the process of completing the strength of the field batteries and of arming the troops with proper rifles will have been fully carried out. At present, according to General Norman only thirty out of fifty British regiments have been furnished with Sniders, although as far back as June, 1869, the Indian Government asked for 64,000 rifles of the Martini-Henry make. Owing however to much vexatious opposition of gun-makers and their friends at home, this excellent weapon is only now being issued to British regiments at home. Meanwhile the Snider will serve all present needs in India, and the twenty thousand still wanting are already, we believe, on their way out. Of Snider ammunition there is now no lack in India, and the factory for making cartridges out there already approaches completion. We are sorry to hear that only 30,000 Enfields have as yet been distributed among the native infantry, but perhaps the good time is not far off when they will all be armed with Sniders, which are certainly better weapons than anything likely to be used against them in Eastern warfare. Of rifled muzzle-loading field-guns—unfortunately not made of bronze—General Norman counts upon a pretty large supply in the course of this year. By that time perhaps Colonel Maxwell may have begun to prove the superiority of Indian to English processes for casting bronze guns. A supply of heavy rifled cannon for forts and coast defences has already been sanctioned, but it appears that the Moncrieff system of mounting guns has not yet been found to answer for the heavy ordnance already mounted in Fort William, Bombay, and Aden. India is also to be supplied with mitrailleuses as soon as they have been finally adopted in this country. With regard to torpedoes, the experiments lately made in the Hooghly by Colonel Hyde, R.E., will lead to the adoption of a cheap but efficient plan for guarding with those deadly machines the approaches to every Indian port.

A large establishment of cattle is still to be kept up, not only to supplement the work of railways in carrying troops, but also for the use of several movable columns and for the camps of exercise which will be formed in the cold weather. The flying columns will aggregate 23,000 men of all arms, equipped with twelve horse-batteries or seventy-two guns.

The outlay of a million on military public works for 1871-2 includes £34,330 on fortifications at Bombay, Rangoon, Thayetmyo, Secunderabad; and £107,636 on manufacturing works at Kirkee, Cossipore, Ishapore, and Dum-dum, the seat of the new Snider Factory. A charge of £416,932 represents buildings for troops at twenty-five different places, which unfortunately include the station of Nusseerabad. There is a separate charge for military roads to Chakrata and Ranikhet, the latter of which will no doubt help to open up the tea and iron districts of Kemaon. Another item is for the supply of much needed water at Aden and Peshawar.

The marine expenditure of £777,800 will include £70,000 for the six ships of the Royal Navy destined to serve in the Indian Seas, £168,000 for stores for India, and £50,000 for pensions to members of the old Indian Navy. On the Indian side the estimated outlay of £487,100 will be partly covered by £237,900 of receipts. The reduction of the old Indian Marine is still to complete, but some savings will be effected [illegible] soon as the last of the old Persian Gulf squadron shall ha[illegible] been replaced by a Royal Navy vessel. Among other Indian charges are the maintenance of the new monitors, the cost of dockyards, river-surveys, telegraph ships, light-ships and lighthouses in Burmah, marine services at Aden, Kurrachee, Madras, and the Persian Gulf, and of Marine Pensioners at Bombay.

The reduction of the rate of exchange on family remittances from India was not to our thinking a politic step. In the days of the East India Company, if we remember rightly, the old rate of 2s. 6d. for the rupee was kept up many years after the rate of exchange had fallen to 2s. A difference of 1d. in the rupee means a charge against Indian officers of 10d. in the £1, or about £1 per cent.; no small burden added to the income-tax they have lately been paying in India. But when it was given out that after April 1 officers on furlough would draw pay at the reduced rate of 1s. 11d. the rupee, there naturally arose a great outcry, especially among those who came home under the Furlough Rules of 1868; said rules expressly promising payment at a uniform rate of 2s. the rupee. We are glad however to find that a step so ill-considered has for the present been retraced. All officers now at home will continue, we believe, to draw their pay at the old rate; not only those who come under the new furlough rules, but those also who took leave under the rules of 1854. It has indeed been reported that a despatch has gone out to India, recommending the cancelment of the obnoxious clause in the new rules; but we have reason to believe that no such step has actually been taken as yet, and we would fain hope that the India Office will take time to consider the wisdom of any further tampering with regulations hardly three years old.

We observe that the Secretary of State for India is to receive a deputation on Wednesday, the 3rd inst., regarding a ship channel between Madras and Ceylon.

We notice with deep regret the death of Major-General Arthur Broome, at sea, on March 27, on his passage home. The late Controller-General of Military Accounts had left India in a state of health which caused his friends an anxiety that was only too well grounded. Like so many before him, he had, in fact, overstayed his time. He entered the Bengal Artillery in 1827, was a captain of 1845, a lieutenant-colonel of 1857, and a major-general of 1868. About twenty years ago Capt. Broome brought out the first volume of a detailed history of the Bengal Army, which promised to become a very useful work had he succeeded in carrying it on. No second volume however has since appeared.

We learn by telegram that the counsel for Ameer Khan and his fellow prisoners applied for a writ to remove the trial of these men from Patna to Calcutta. The Advocate-General got the question adjourned till to-day, when cause would be shown against granting the rule desired.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, May 2, 1871.

NATIVES IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

WHATEVER good may have already come of the recent statute empowering the Indian Government to appoint specially qualified natives to the higher posts in the Indian Civil Service, without passing the usual examinations in England, it appears that Madras, at any rate, has reaped no benefit from such a boon. In Bengal and Bombay one or two fortunate gentlemen have already been made Collectors or Judges of the High Court, but no native in the Southern Presidency has yet found his way to either post. We need hardly say that no want of special talent in the one Presidency can account for its exclusion from the good things provided for the other two. It would be a libel on the natives of Madras to assume their special unfitness for any work to which natives of other parts of India have lately been considered equal; and indeed it would not be difficult to pick out from among the former at least a few gentlemen perfectly qualified by character, position, and attainments, for some of the very highest places in the civil government of their own province.

One or two instances will serve the purpose of our argument. In naming the Hon. V. Ramiengar, the Brahmin gentleman who now fills a seat in the Madras Legislative Council, we are mentioning a person not unknown to several members of the Indian Council. Mr. Ramiengar is, we believe, a "Proficient" in the Madras University. Having studied there with much distinction, he entered one of the lower grades in the government service. His high attainments in English, combined with industry and a marked talent for official business, enabled him to fill with credit successive posts in the Revenue and Judicial Departments, and at length to win the notice of Sir Charles Trevelyan, then Governor of Madras, who gave him a friendly lift in the public service. He acquitted himself so well in his new appointment, that at the death of Colonel Temple he was placed in charge of the Stamp Department, an office which he still holds. At one time he was also officiating as Registrar-General of Assurances, to the entire satisfaction of the Government he has always so well served. The best proof of his high deserts may be found in his appointment to the Legislative Council. His usefulness in this line may be gathered from the fact of his selection for service on all committees, whether on revenue, judicial, or other business. Is it too much to ask that a gentleman who has thus risen by his own merits to a post of the highest honour, may be considered fit for the less eminent but better paid career of a Collector? If Mr. Ramiengar is not fit to serve as a Collector, so far as such fitness may be argued from his past services, it would be hard to predicate any man's fitness for any duties he has not yet discharged.

Let us take another instance, that of Mr. Ranganada Shastry, one of the judges of the Small Cause Court at Madras. This gentleman was the first native who ever obtained the "Proficient" certificate at the Madras University. Before filling his present post, he served with great credit for eighteen years as Chief Interpreter of Vernacular Languages to the High Court of Madras. For several years his name appeared on the list of Governors of the University. It is more than six years since he was raised to the Bench. To say nothing of his judicial experience, his knowledge of Sanskrit would render him extremely useful to the judges of the High Court, in respect of cases which involve points of purely Hindu Law. Is it impossible to find a place for him among the High Court Judges of Madras?

FINANCE AND FREE SPEECH.

SIR BARNES PEACOCK has been revenged already. It is only about ten years ago since Lord Halifax thought to quench the "purple light" of free discussion in the Viceregal Council, where Sir Barnes and a few brave comrades had so often withstood the whole might of official despotism. The old Council of 1853 talked too much and set the natives too outspoken an example to be endured any longer. It was accordingly superseded by a council of quite another sort, which had no power of free action and not much of free speech apart from the Viceroy himself. Lord Halifax breathed freely again, and despotism had its own way in Calcutta. No troublesome questions have since been stirred there, nor until last year had the voice of popular criticism found any powerful echo within Government House.

Thanks however to Sir Richard Temple's fiscal provocations the old spirit of free discussion has at length revealed itself in no questionable shape. The recent debates on the Budget for the new year have proved the vanity of trying to muzzle the expression of honest English opinion even from the lips of Government nominees. Messrs. Robinson, Cowie, and Inglis could not have been more outspoken, had the theatre of debate lain in Westminster itself instead of Calcutta, while the fact of their official connection with the Supreme Government adds a deep significance to criticisms uttered in behalf of the provinces they severally represent. Not less noteworthy is the substantial support which the protesting councillors received from a critic so little disposed to take the popular side as the new Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. The spirit thus roused within the council-room implies the growth of a new force with which the rulers of India are bound to reckon fairly, if they would keep true alike to their past pledges and to the teachings of the present hour. It would be alike unwise and mischievous to ignore the growing demand in India for some form of government less purely despotic than that which has hitherto fairly served its purpose. Mr. Fitzjames Stephen may choose to sneer at the members of the Viceroy's Legislative Council for presuming to criticise the measures of the Indian Government; but insolence of speech is not argument, and the gentlemen whose plain speaking in behalf of an aggrieved public forced an important concession from Sir Richard Temple, had no need to be reminded of their proper duties by a defeated opponent who could not even keep his temper. Impartial bystanders will give them credit, not for stepping out of their own province, but for refusing to act the part of dumb dogs when justice and sound policy called upon them to speak out. The fact is that they could not help themselves, for the stress of public opinion was urging them on. And it was inevitable that this would happen, whenever the natives had learned the rudiments of political science, and taken courage to think a little for themselves. The cry they have lately raised for representative government must not be rashly set down to the prompting of artful English editors and merchants resentful of an unpopular tax. It happens that a common grievance has for once united Englishmen and natives in a movement which the average official mind may ridicule or hold in utter dread, but which to impartial observers will seem neither dreadful nor ridiculous. Anglo-Indian officials indeed are far from fools, and very many of them must have watched with a discerning interest the growth of a definite craving among educated natives for something like a proper share in the administration of their own country.

What else indeed was likely to issue from the seed we helped to sow? We have for a long time past been gradually teaching the natives of India our own Shibboleths, and training them in our own ways. For the last thirty-five years they have been accustomed to speak out their minds through a free Press. For a quarter of a century we have taught them English ideas and the English language in schools which have also served as stepping-stones to official employment. We have called their leaders into our Councils, we have encouraged large classes of the people to organise for social and political purposes, we have opened for some of them a special inlet into the higher ranks of the Civil Service, we have continually asked them for their private, sometimes for their public, opinion on the leading questions of the day. Through the new Municipal Committees we professed to lead them further on the road to self-government. The yet later concession of enlarged fiscal powers to the local Governments, if it meant anything, means another step forward on the same road. And most powerful perhaps of all influences to the same end is the presence among the natives in ever larger numbers of an active self-reliant European community, whose interests commonly march with theirs, and whose example would embolden them to struggle for the attainment of their own political objects.

To talk indeed of a public opinion in India, like that which is always working among ourselves, would, of course, be still an anachronism. But every mail brings fresh proof of the pace at which opinion is beginning to shape itself in India also; and the Councillors who opposed Sir Richard Temple were only doing their duty both by the Supreme Government and the people of their respective provinces. There is no question so vitally important to the rulers of India as a question of finance. No foreign Government, however strong, can afford to make rash experiments with the goodwill of its subjects on a matter which peculiarly affects their pockets. Nobody except Sir R. Temple now contends that the outcry caused by the late heavy income-tax was confined to the European community alone, or even to a limited circle of natives as well. Messrs. Robinson and Inglis showed how wide was the area of popular discontent, developed by the new imposts which a Government in want of money had been driven to raise. Instead of hampering the Executive, as Mr. F. Stephen angrily charged them with doing, they were really rendering it a very great service. They ought, no doubt, to have sat still and voted as they were bidden; but even nominee councillors will sometimes be provoked into speaking out their minds, just as soldiers have refused obedience to some manifestly unrighteous command. Lord Mayo and the Home authorities should feel only too grateful to the gentlemen whose plain-speaking so strangely upset the self-control of Lord Mayo's Minister of Justice. It was meet that the Indian Government should be brought face to face with the facts it had hitherto ignored; that it should fully recognise the mischievous effects of taxing the people in the least popular way. A government like that of India must choose between keeping its outlay within the old limits and raising fresh taxes with the full consent of its subjects. The greater its need of money, the more reasons should it discover for deferring to the wishes of those who are best able to satisfy its wants. According to the testimony of an experienced "Punjab Officer," writing to the Times, the people complain that they have no real voice in the management of their finances. They feel that they have a right to be taken into our counsels "not merely as to the mode of levying taxes, but, what is far more important, as to the expenditure." They resent the deference so often shown to them in private by officials who in public know them not. They object to having their brains picked for our sole benefit. "We have no voice"—says one of them—"in the management of the country. We are never asked how to govern the province more economically. We are only asked how to raise more money. What do we care for large barracks built in some other province, or for canals and roads made in some other part of India?" They could often suggest cheaper ways of making canals and building bridges, but their English masters would only laugh at them, or put their suggestions aside as crude and antiquated. It is not that the people are set against all new taxation, but they naturally ask for some voice in these fiscal arrangements, and are ready to tax themselves for any purpose they could be brought to understand. But the waste and the delay they see around them in the carrying out of useful public works tends only to increase the annoyance they have begun to feel at their continued exclusion from the management of their financial resources.

It is evident therefore that the old system of purely despotic rule is growing more and more out of date for India. It is useless trying to suppress the irrepressible. Louis Napoleon has exemplified the folly of such an effort. We can no longer put off with milk for babes a people already used to the taste of strong meat. There is no need to move too fast in the new direction; but to move forward, however slowly, is become the duty of any Government that would rule in India over a contented people. The natives are a long way off from our own stage of political growth, but they have already learned to walk a little, and practice, if unchecked by obsolete restrictions, will in time develop what capacity they may have for walking alone and far.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE BONUS GRIEVANCE.

The Times of India observes that both "locals" and Staff Corps men (of the old Indian armies) being interested in the Bonus Compensation Question, the renewed correspondence respecting it now published has given much satisfaction in India. Since 1866-7, when the last almost hopeless agitation on behalf of these claims took place, many authorities have changed places. The subservient agents of the great amalgamation plot, like General Norman at Simla and Colonel Kirby at Bombay, still write that the orders of her Majesty's Government (i.e., the Horse Guards through the India Office) have been "strictly adhered to" and "fully carried into effect." But there are now new men, who, having had no hand in the great conspiracy by which the Indian armies were disorganised, are free to speak their minds as to whether these bonus claims were settled "with due regard to the interests of the officers concerned;" and the unbiassed verdict of these men is that justice has not been done. Amongst those who have thus spoken out at the eleventh hour, but emphatically, are Sir Seymour Fitzgerald, Sir Almeric Spencer, the Bombay Chief, and General A. T. Wilde, Military Secretary to the Madras Government. It is very clear that in face of the enormous sums now about to be paid to officers in the Home army for their commissions, the more distinctly public investment of Indian officers cannot be confiscated. Of course, it will be difficult for the Indian finances to bear the sacrifice in one year; but a plan may easily be hit upon by which bonus compensation may be made part of a retirement scheme that would liberate two or three hundred field officers from irksome "general duty," and relieve the finances from part of the avalanche of retiring allowances now impending over the revenues. Colonel Sykes once more deserves the hearty thanks of his former comrades and present successors.

LORD MAYO AND THE INDIAN PRESS.

The Englishman is not concerned at present to argue as to what other kind of tax might have been substituted for an Income-tax, nor to object to the light and airy manner in which Sir Richard Temple has disposed of the five or six he was good enough to mention to his Legislative brethren. We content ourselves with saying once more, what we have said all along, that the Income-tax, as it was carried out last year, was productive of the very greatest oppression, and that it has caused a wide-spread feeling of discontent and disquietude. We say also, that no such tax can be imposed without, to a greater or less degree, causing the same feelings over again, and that the assertions of sundry Councillors as to the paucity of complaints are dispersed by the inexorable logic of facts. Lord Mayo says: "Of the terms in which my honourable friend has been assailed, that a great deal of it has been cowardly and almost all of it unjust." That all anonymous writing must be in that sense cowardly, that the writer is safe under an incognito, is true enough, but the public characters of public men are by common consent open to criticism, and where that criticism is unfair, the victim has always his remedy at the bar of public opinion. We have not yet got to the French system of signing newspaper articles — that form of Positivism will probably come in with the Millennium—and whilst our present system lasts, we have a right to follow it without incurring the charge of "cowardice." As to the "injustice" of the assault made on Sir Richard Temple, we can only reiterate for the twentieth time that it has been proved to demonstration (and the Viceroy can satisfy himself of the fact if he likes) that the cases of proved oppression in the working of the Income-tax amounted to more than ten-fold the historical thirteen, in which the Finance Minister expressed such childlike belief, and that in one division alone. We said this at the time—we say it now—the challenge is merely a fair one, let Sir Richard Temple answer it, before the charge is pronounced unjust. The issue is of the simplest. Government admit, it seems now, and deplore whilst they admit, that some oppression has been caused, but they deny that the oppression has been great; we affirm that the oppression has been great, and will still be great, for the number of those who are liable to pay Income-tax under the new law by no means represents the number that will be called upon to pay it, or who will have to bribe in order to obtain the remission which the law gives them as of right. This is the real difficulty in the working of an Income-tax Act, a difficulty clearly seen and pointed out by Mr. Inglis, but which neither the Governor-General nor his Finance Minister seem able to appreciate. It will be time enough to accuse the community of injustice when these statements are proved to be incorrect. Whatever else may have been said, and people no doubt reason ill when their feelings are moved, we emphatically deny that there have been any mis-statements as to the oppression caused by the Income-tax.

Bengal.

THE BENGAL BUDGET.

The Lieutenant-Governor warned his hearers that his figures were only approximations, and he showed that while in 1868-69 the expenditure in the Departments made over to local governments was £1,800,615, in 1869-70 it had fallen to £1,610,580. The grant in 1870-71 was £1,540,000, and the assignment under the resolution of 14th December £1,430,424. That is, the assignment for the departments made over is less than the expenditure of 1868-69 by £370,000, less than the expenditure during the first year of the crisis by £180,000, and less than the grant for the worst year of the crisis by £90,000. Yet Mr. Ellis and Sir Richard Temple would have us believe Bengal has been treated liberally. Of the £200,000 made over out of the surplus of 1870-71 about £50,000 will fall to Bengal; but as Bengal is so much behind in her schemes of local taxation, that sum must be retained as a working balance. As far as can be at present ascertained, the state of Bengal is thus:—the assignment is £1,430,424, and after every possible reduction has been made, the demands to be met exceed £1,690,000, so that we start with a local deficit of £260,000. But the departmental figures will best show the unfairness we have noticed in the assignments. The expenditure on jails was last year £270,000, the grant is £205,700; Police expenditure, £545,500, grant, £524,000; Education expenditure, £240,000, grant, £220,000; Medical services, expenditure, £91,800, grant, £84,500. In printing, the exorbitant charges of the Alipore Jail Press having been cut down, will effect a nominal difference on both sides of the account. In Registration the grant is a minus quantity, or £5,500 less than nothing, because the local Government is credited with receipts amounting to £40,000. Mr. Campbell again protested against registration being made a source of revenue. In Jails the matter is worse, as against a grant of £205,700, receipts are set off to the extent of £110,000. But formerly convicts made roads, and when that system was given up, jail proceeds were made liable to some extent for local roads. The sum thus made over has averaged £40,000 per annum. The result is that the real sum under this head at the disposal of the Lieutenant-Governor is only £60,000. There can be no saving here. On the contrary we are threatened with increased expenditure in order to secure proper punishment for short term prisoners.

But again in Police the same thing appears. The expenditure on Police was in 1868-69, £610,000, in 1869-70, £580,000, in 1870-71, £550,000, and for 1871-72 the estimated expenditure is £540,000. Well, the grant is less than this, being only £520,400, from which £70,000 must be deducted on account of receipts for Municipal Police. Bengal with three times the area, and double the population of Bombay, receives only £450,000 for Police, whilst Bombay receives £350,000, the grant is as 9 to 7, and bears no proportion to area or population. In Roads and miscellaneous Public Improvements a reference to past years reveals a curious comment on the explanations in Council. Thus the expenditure on this head in 1863-64 was £241,400; in 1864-65, £285,300; in 1865-66, £271,600; in 1866-67, £292,600; in 1867-68, £248,800; in 1868-69, £295,400; in 1869-70, £221,800; in 1870-71, £157,800; and the grant for 1871-72 is only £138,000. Comment is needless; a deficit here is inevitable. The cost of road repairs in Bengal is £110,500, the cost of the roads in progress such as Cuttack-Pooree, Darjeeling, Bhagulpore-Soory, and the roads in the tea districts, is £39,500; new roads must be made from new funds, or not at all. In civil buildings the grant is £103,600, against which we must set off £55,200 for repairs and establishments, leaving very little to go on with, and yet the Government has generously given Bengal the honour of constructing the new High Court Palace, the Calcutta University, &c. With these figures to guide us we can only express our wonder at any attempt being made in Council to acquire for the Supreme Government the credit of liberality in these grants. One thing is clear, that, irrespective of the question of a road cess, and local cesses for local purposes,—the erection of a kind of district municipalities,—the operation of the measure is to make local taxation in Bengal a necessity. It has been the policy of Lord Mayo to introduce this scheme, it has been hurried into the world crude, ill-digested, and badly constructed, and it has everywhere made increased taxation inevitable, and yet Lord Mayo affirms that his policy has been a decrease of taxation, and a lightening of the burdens of the people.

Mr. Campbell, true to his pamphlet "Our Finances," published in July, 1859, when he was employed in Oude, threw out a hint as to the propriety of a license tax to touch the rich, a tax on servants, equipages, &c., and a tobacco tax, and expressed himself very strongly against a salt tax. His Honour read a letter from Mr. W. W. Hunter to Sir W. Grey, showing the effect of a high salt tax in Orissa, but Mr. Eden, who spoke as one who already feels the weight of a local administration, declared this was the most extraordinary production he had ever listened to, a discourtesy which was quite unnecessary, as it in no way strengthened his argument in support of a salt tax. That argument per se is deserving of great consideration, supported as it was by Mr. Robinson, and Baboo Digamber Mitter. These gentlemen held that a salt tax, besides other recommendations, was to be preferred, inasmuch as it actually, supposing taxation to be a necessity, consulted the interests and wishes of the poor.—Indian Daily News.

STATION TALK.

KULU, March 18.—The Zameendars are beginning to be more reconciled to the enhanced price of salt. The Wazeer Gosaion of Mundi died, aged nearly eighty, a short time back; he was a great trader, and seemed to be part owner of nearly everything in Mundi State. A council of six has been appointed to carry on his official duties. Mr. Harrison, Assistant Commissioner on duty at Mundi, was assaulted in the bazaar of that place. His assailants have been sentenced to three years' imprisonment. Captain McNeile has, I hear, been appointed as Assistant Commissioner for two years to the outpost of Kulu. The Chaplain and Civil Surgeon of Dhurmsala are expected here daily, on their half-yearly visit to the valley. Native sulphur must be added to the list of valuable minerals of the Wazeeri Rupi Talooka of Kulu. I cannot for a short time state with any degree of certainty in what quantity it exists, but should it occur, as I suspect, in workable quantities, it ought to be supplied at a lower rate than that coming from the Pulga mines in Ladak; what other minerals may be found hereafter it is impossible to say. It will take years to explore the mining grant here properly. I only wish coal of any kind could be come across, it would simplify smelting wonderfully. It would be absurd to expect the Geological Survey to make many mineral discoveries; they are but few in number compared to the great extent of India, and running section lines, so as to get some general idea of the age of the different formations, is all we can fairly expect from them. I think the rock crystal mine at Sakhti, in the Shaicer Kothi, will prove of great value. The natives say the crystal is nothing more than ice, which a long series of years has hardened and consolidated. Were this novel glacial theory true, pebble spectacles should fall in price. Our new hospital is progressing, that is to say, the stones are being collected for it. As the D. P. W. have nothing to do with its building, there are hopes that when built it will not tumble down again. The improvements on the Ladak road are to be continued this season. Weather mild during the day, but cold at night. Crops a fair average.

DELHI, March 26.—The Hon. Mr. Seward arrived last night by the 7.30 train. Colonel Ralph Young, Commissioner, and some other officers, were in waiting at the platform to receive the distinguished visitor, who at once drove to Ludlow Castle, the residence of Colonel Young, whose guest he is to be during his stay. There is a rumour afloat that in consequence of Colonel Fraser having resigned his appointment of Assistant Adjutant General of the Allahabad Division, Major Schmidt, commanding the wing of the 109th Regiment here, is likely to fill the vacancy. I have heard reasons given for Colonel Fraser's resignation, but refrain from mentioning them at present. I am sorry to say that there have been some cases of serious illness here; among others Colonel Marquis, commanding the 17th N.I., has been suffering considerably, and was at one time dangerously ill. Owing to his anxiety to be "off the sick list," and ready to receive the General, he presumed upon a slight change for the better, went out, and the same night suffered a relapse which was well nigh proving fatal. I am glad to add, however, that he is now quite out of danger, and in a fair way towards recovery, though it is almost certain that he will have to take leave to the hills, if not to England, the latter being the advice given by the medicos, and I think the best that could be given will probably be taken, even at the loss such a step would entail. Mr. Assistant Commissioner Stogdon, C.S., has been transferred from Delhi to Rawul Pindee or Murree; he was to have left last evening. Mr. C. R. Cooke, B.A., has returned from Kussowlie, where he has been investigating the Lawrence Asylum "difficulty," with what result deponent is not at liberty to say. Mr. Cummins, C.E., District Engineer, E.I.R., is I hear, to be transferred from Delhi to Gaziabad, where his head quarters will, in future, be fixed. Gaziabad is a fast rising locality, and will in time, and at no very distant period, be a thriving station. I should say that a well-managed hotel there would even now pay as a speculation, for there is always considerable detention there, and passengers who come up tired by the E.I.R. would be glad of a good night's rest and refreshment before they proceed Punjabwards. A well-managed hotel, with a civil manager over a few civil underlings, who would not open their eyes and stare a person out of countenance, because he calls for only a cup of tea and a slice of toast would, I feel certain, prove a success. As matters now stand it is only by chance—when it happens to be ready—that travellers can procure tea at the Allahabad and Cawnpore refreshment rooms. The presiding geniuses at these large stations seem to look upon the beverage which cheers but not inebriates, as quite out of their line, and are only alive to loud orders for dinners and wine, ad libitum. Mr. Kellner ought to remedy this really glaring error in his otherwise good arrangements, and it is his servants, not himself, that are to blame.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

Accounts Department.—We believe that the arrangement made on General Broome obtaining medical leave last year will be continued, and that Mr. Kellner proceeds to Simla this season in charge of the office of the Controller-General of Military Expenditure.—Englishman.

Captain Lillingston, at present Private Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor N.W.P., is to be appointed to the Forest branch of the Public Works Department. Captain Lillingston took high honours at Thomason College, Roorkee, in the session of 1867. He obtained the Government prize of Rs. 1,000, as also the Thomason Gold Medal.

The Hon. Ashley Eden.—Lord Mayo has dared criticism by appointing the Bhootan hero (?), the Hon. Ashley Eden, Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to officiate as Chief Commissioner of British Burmah during the absence on furlough of Major-General A. Fytche, C.S.I., or until further orders. Mr. Eden is the nephew of the Earl of Auckland, who was Governor-General of India during the miserable Afghanistan war. His father was the late Bishop of Bath and Wells.

Accident to Dr. Kidd.—Dr. Kidd, Civil Surgeon of Mandla, has met with a severe injury. He was riding out to inspect the Shâipûrâ dispensary, when his horse stumbled and fell on him, breaking the bone of one leg just above the ankle. In this state the Doctor lay in the jungle for nearly twelve hours before help reached him. He was carried into Mandla on a charpoy, where the fracture was set, and he was progressing favourably up to last accounts received by the Jabulpoor Chronicle.

Civil.—We regret to learn that Mr. Pitt Kennedy, the Secretary to the Bengal Legislative Council, who is about to succeed Mr. Graham as Standing Counsel, will proceed home almost immediately on sick leave. Mr. Pitt Kennedy's departure deprives Government of the services of one of the ablest case-lawyers who has ever come to India, and his going is the more to be regretted as Government is at present in the midst of one of the most important state trials which has ever come on for hearing in this country.—Englishman.

Railways.—The Government of India have requested the Government of the North-West Provinces to order the Superintendent of the Roorkee workshops to make up a sample narrow gauge ballast-waggon of the following dimensions:—Gauge of rail, 3 feet 3 inches; maximum rigid wheel-base, 7 feet; diameter of wheels, 2 feet; diameter of axles, 3 inches. If the specimen is approved of, 100 more are likely to be ordered, it is presumed, for the Rajpootana State Railway.

Lord Mayo.—The following, we believe, will be found nearly a correct programme of his Excellency the Viceroy's progress to Simla. His Excellency will leave Calcutta to-morrow evening by night train, and will be in camp at Behcea the following afternoon. On Tuesday he will be at Dehree, next day at Mogulserai, reaching Allahabad on Thursday morning. There will be a halt of two days at Allahabad, and Cawnpore will be reached on Saturday morning. His Excellency will proceed that afternoon by special train to Lucknow, where he will remain till Thursday afternoon, the 13th inst. Kehree will be reached on Friday morning, and the party will be in camp from the 15th to the 23rd, reaching Allyghur on Monday, the 24th. From the 25th to the 27th will be spent at Delhi. Scharunpore will be reached on the 28th. From thence his Excellency will proceed to Chuckratta arriving at Simla on May 4.—Englishman, April 1.

Foreign Office.—We understand that the second Under-Secretaryship in the Foreign Department is to be abolished, the work having been provided for by the re-distribution of duties which the projected Secretariat of Agriculture, Commerce and Revenue has enabled the late Committee to make. Mr. Girdlestone, the Assistant Under-Secretary will not, therefore, re-join his present appointment at the close of the Cashmere season, but will probably be appointed to one of the Non-Regulation Provinces as a deputy commissioner.—Englishman.

The "Gazetteer."—The Pioneer understands that Dr. W. W. Hunter, C.S., with the head-quarters of the "Gazetteer" staff, will be established at Simla this hot season. Colonel Thuillier, the Surveyor-General of India, will have his head-quarters also at Simla this season instead of at Mussoorie, in order more conveniently to discuss the arrangements connected with the "Gazetteer." It is said that no additional expense will be involved by these arrangements. Our contemporary trusts that Dr. Hunter will now push on this long-needed work throughout the various provinces still remaining to be treated of.

Forests.—During the last eight years the revenue of the State forests in British India has mounted from 35 lakhs to 47 lakhs, but the charges have during the same period increased from 18 to 45 lakhs, so that the net revenue from forests has actually for the time diminished. This is due to the large establishments, which have been wisely as well as liberally sanctioned, with a view to securing absolute efficiency in the department. The State has now, therefore, done its part, and the responsibility of completely fulfilling its objects rests with the department. These objects are to preserve, increase, and improve the timber supply of India, while contributing a handsome quota to the Budget by judicious felling.—Pioneer.

Dr. W. W. Hunter.—Mr. Hunter, LL.D., who is at the head of one of the most arduous and extensive of modern literary and scientific undertakings, the compilation of a Gazetteer of all India, leaves for Simla on Monday, proceeding by easy stages. Still crippled and bedridden from the effect of a severe accident met with whilst "harrying" the country for special information, facts to be hereafter wrought into the work upon which he is engaged, Mr. Hunter has laboured as indefatigably as though pain and broken bones were unknown to him. We gather some glimpse of the magnitude of the Gazetteer in course of preparation from the fact that it includes a population eleven millions more numerous than that of all Europe, Russia excepted! It is close upon three hundred years since a Mahomedan Minister of the Court of Delhi attempted to put together a record similar to that now growing up under the orders of her Majesty's Indian Government.—Englishman.

N.W. Provinces.—Sir William Muir has withdrawn the License Bill, which would have saddled the North-West Provinces with £100,000 of local taxation. His despatch of January 27 was to some extent based on a misapprehension, and the "increased expenditure," estimated at £755,170, has since been found to exceed the requirements of the North-West. The public discussion of the proposed ways and means for raising this large sum induced his Honour carefully to reconsider his necessities, and he has succeeded in eliminating what would have probably been the most irksome of the Local Tax Bills. One great advantage of this decentralisation scheme is that each local tax will be thus subjected to an ordeal of searching criticism by the local press, and we congratulate our Allahabad contemporary on the result of his vehement protests. Sir William Muir, on his side, has shown a conscientious anxiety to reduce his demand to the minimum, even at the expense of having to recede from the position which he had formerly taken up. What between Mr. Cowie's amendment on the Income-tax Bill and Sir William Muir's withdrawal of the Local License Tax, public opinion has played an important part in the Government of India this cold weather.

Mr. F. Stephen on the Law of Evidence.—Some enterprising Calcutta publisher should try to obtain Mr. Stephen's permission to publish, in a pamphlet form, for the benefit of young lawyers, the speech on the Evidence Bill. It contains exactly the same idea that was in Dr. Abernethy's celebrated reply to a medical student who asked him how he detected the presence of some particular disease. "I cannot tell you," he said, "but I can detect it," or words to that effect. The experience of a very laborious life was brought to bear upon the point which a young man expected to have the key to in a very few words. Mr. Stephen says the same thing. You cannot lay down any unerring laws of evidence. You—that is a clear-headed lawyer—know by instinct whether what assumes to be evidence is so or not, and it is only by long practice, careful watching, close analysis, and sound judgment, that a clear and reliable conclusion can be come to. So far there seems little in Mr. Stephen's speech to guide a young student as to the law of evidence, though there is very much more even in this than at first sight appears. After this, however, Mr. Stephen gives some excellent rules, and to these rules, and to the philosophy in which they are embodied, and the illustrations which accompany them, we particularly refer any young legal student, and indeed any student into whose hands these remarks may fall. Most legal speeches are dry and detailed, this one is the philosophy of the law of evidence, and it reads like a page from Macaulay.—Friend of India.

COURAGE.—Courage, it has been said, is constitutional, but I consider that he is the brave man who has the pluck to run away, in battle. When a gallant but close-fisted general was going through a certain town in Ireland, he could not understand why he met with such an enthusiastic welcome from the crowd of beggars whom he had refused to help. An old woman followed him down the street ejaculating blessings upon him. "God Almighty bless yer honour, but its you've got the bowld heart." The General blushed, but failed to understand the compliment which the mob cheered loudly. "Sure didn't he save my son Pat in battle—the Vargin bless him!" continued the old lady. The General got interested, he could not recall the circumstance, but it might have been possible that he had performed some such gallant feat, and that as brave men are modest men the circumstance had faded from his memory. He stopped and inquired of the dame the particulars. She waited till the mob got well within hearing, and then screamed to the General's astonishment—"It was in the battle ye did it yer honour. Glory be to God, you ran first, and Pat followed!"—Englishman.

DON'T STEAL MUSICAL-BOXES.—A thief in Calcutta lately stole a musical-box, thinking, probably, from its ornamental exterior, that it was a jewel-case. Having got off safe with his prize, he made his way to Wellesley-square, where, in the shrubbery, grows a certain large and bushy shrub. Close to this shrub resides the mallee, who looks after the enclosure. The thief sate down in the shadow of the bush, and proceeded to pick the lock. The "lock," however, was the spring to set the wheels going, so that all of a sudden the horrified thief heard his jewel-case begin in a lively manner to play "The Wind that Shakes the Barley." He jumped up, flung the bewitched bokkus into the bush, and fled. Meanwhile, the mallee awoke, listened—yes!—his bush was resonant with sweet sounds! He sate up; a cold perspiration burst out upon him; the bush which he had tended from its twighood—which he had watched these many years with all a mallee's pride—was decidedly bedevilled. The tune stopped—click, click—and then began the "Mabel Valse." This was too much for the mallee, who fled from the accursed spot to the police inspector. Swiftly the pair returned to the garden. Cautiously they approached the tree, just in time to hear the musical-box, which had now gone through its repertoire, rattle off the last bars of a comic song. The inspector recognised the sound, dived into the big bush, and extracted the musical box.—Pioneer.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, April 5.—We have had a much quieter market during the week, and there has been a tendency in some cases to weaker prices. GREY JACCONETS: 39-inch and 44-inch have been in improved demand at an advance of 1 anna per piece. MADAPOLLAMS and T-CLOTHS are still inactive. GREY MULLS: 39-inch and 44-inch are unchanged, the wide widths are quieter, and prices have a weakening tendency. BLEACHED JACCONETS and MULLS are in fair request at last quotations. GREY TWIST: Prices are on a level with those current last mail, the market closing quiet. COLOURED TWIST: Dull, and prices weaker.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, April 5.—SALTPETRE: Calcutta five per cent. refraction, Rs. 6-11; Crude, 7 to 10 refraction, Rs. 6-3 to 6; and twelve per cent. refraction, Rs. 6 to 5-12. The stocks in hand do not exceed 453 tons. RICE: The demand has been large both for Europe and the outports—at from Rs. 3-3 to 3-4 for Sorta, whilst middling, for England, may be quoted at Rs. 2-4 to 2-8. LINSEED: Prices have hardened somewhat for immediate delivery, though sales for forward delivery have been made at lower rates. Prices may be quoted for bold at from Rs. 4-6 to 4-9; medium, Rs. 4-3 to 4-5; and small, Rs. 4 to 4-1 for immediate shipment. RAPESEED: Prices are firm; the demand has been fully equal to the supply. Yellow, 4 per cent. admixture, Rs. 4-8 to 4-10; mixed, Rs. 4-5 to 4-6; Eastern Bengal, Rs. 3-12 to 4. RAW SILK: About 100 bales were sold during the week at slightly lower rates. A few samples of the March bund have arrived, and offers were made of Rs. 23 for Cooldahs, but holders held out for higher rates, though we hear Rs. 23-8 has been accepted. CORARS: Upwards of 5,000 pieces J. L. C. and S. B. C. have been sold for Europe at slightly reduced rates. Prices remain at Rs. 125 to 165 per corge.

Madras.

MILITARY.—It has, we believe, been proposed to make Secunderabad the head-quarters of the Madras army.

PAY OFFICE.—Colonel Hamilton succeeds Colonel Mundy as paymaster at the Madras Presidency Circle.

MILITARY TELEGRAPHY.—A class has been opened at Madras for teaching soldiers telegraphy. The class at present consists of eight men—two from the Artillery and six from H.M.'s 45th regiment.

ACCIDENT TO MR. BREEKS.—Mr. Breeks, the Commissioner of Ootacamund, met with a serious accident on the 25th March. He was thrown from his horse and hurt severely on the shoulders and back.

THE SANCHI TOPE.—The Delhi Gazette learns that the cast of the gateway of the Buddhist Temple at Sanchi, intended for the approaching International Exhibition, will reach from the floor to the ceiling of one of the principal galleries. The labour in taking the cast may be imagined from the fact that the materials and machinery weighed 28 tons, and had to be conveyed from Jubbulpore to Sanchi, a distance of 180 miles.

CONVICTION OF MR. COLQUHOUN.—The D. P. W. prosecutions in Tinnevelly have resulted in the conviction of Mr. Colquhoun, sub-Engineer, and V. Ragavacharry, contractor. Sentence has, however, been deferred, until another case against the same prisoners is determined. The Sessions Judge has communicated with Government as to a suitable place of incarceration for Mr. Colquhoun. Messrs. Miller and Scharlieb, barristers at-law, defended the prisoners, and Mr. Handley, Government pleader, prosecuted them.

A LARGE COBRA.—A correspondent in Vythery, Wynaad, is anxious to learn the dimensions of the largest cobra killed in Southern India of late years. His coolies killed one in their lines last week of the enormous length of 10 feet 10 inches! The reptile was coiled up amongst their cooking chatties, and most fortunately was despatched from behind. It was stated that when coiled up for its spring "it stood as high as a man," and really even in death was a fearful sight.—Madras Mail.

THE NEXT GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—The Serampore journal states that it is well understood in official circles in London that Mr. Grant Duff is likely to be the next Governor of Madras, if he should chose to abandon an English political career for a few years. "Madras may well be congratulated on the prospect of securing a man who will undoubtedly prove the ablest Governor it has had for half a century. The Presidency will be effectually stirred up by a ruler who will temper the calm Conservatism in which Madras delights with a judicious application of first principles. It would be more in keeping with the antecedents of the present Under Secretary of State for India if he were sent to Bombay; and should the Duke of Argyll succeed in discovering a trained financier who will come out to India, Mr. Grant Duff would doubtless wait for Bombay, for it might become necessary to send Sir R. Temple to Madras. This much is certain, that Mr. Grant Duff is first on the list for an Indian Governorship, and that is satisfactory. He will soon become as popular as he is able when it is his duty to fight for Anglo-Indians and natives, and their interests. There is no abler, shrewder, wiser man, as a politician on foreign affairs, in the House of Commons, and we trust that there will be no hitch in the appointment, cost what it may to Sir Richard Temple or any one. India would owe an immense debt to the appointment of Mr. Grant Duff."

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—We observe that Colonel C. V. Wilkieson, R.E., will probably succeed Colonel Orr as Secretary to the Madras Government, in the Department of Public Works. The appointment has naturally given rise to a good deal of comment, as it involves the supercession of three officers, one of whom, Colonel Carpendale, was generally supposed to be the fittest officer for the post. From what we know of Colonel Carpendale's ability and services we are inclined to coincide in this opinion; and it is difficult to see on what grounds his claims have been set aside.—Englishman.

BURMAN AFFAIRS.—The political resident at Mandalay says that a letter from Captain Strover reports the Panthays to be in the ascendant at Yunan, and that an envoy from them had arrived at Moulmein on his way to Bhamo, but on what errand we are not informed. Whatever the business may be Captain Strover is not to finish it, his place having been recently filled by Captain Spearman. The Agent reports also the arrival of Captain Racchia, of the Steam Corvette Princessa Clothilde at Mandalay, with a suite of four officers. The diary, however, is a bundle of dry bones; we have the bare facts and nothing more, the agent evidently being resolved not to commit himself to any imprudent expression of opinion. The course is a very prudent—"canny"—one, but there are in the diary a few little items interesting enough to have justified some additional lines.

MILITARY.—Colonel Kennedy has been removed by H.E. Lord Napier of Magdala from the command of the 3rd Battalion H.M.'s 60th Rifles, at Bellary. He has been granted six months' leave as a preparatory step, and he bade farewell to Belary on Friday evening, leaving behind him a very unenviable reputation. Ensign Michell was released from arrest on Friday afternoon, and permitted to return to duty, the Court of Inquiry having failed to bring any accusation home to him, despite the aid that they received from the Colonel. Major Montgomery will take the command of the corps pending further orders from the Horse Guards. This officer served with the 60th in the Kaffir war of 1851-53. He entered the army in 1849; and is thus nine years Colonel Kennedy's junior in the service. He is popular alike with officers and men, and it is to be sincerely hoped that under his temporary command the corps will rapidly recover the healthy tone that distinguished it in other days.

DR. W. MACKENZIE.—The retirement of Dr. W. Mackenzie, Inspector General Indian Medical Department, for we presume his six months' leave will end in that, is a subject of some importance and universal regret to the medical men of this Presidency. Singularly lucky as they have been of late years in chiefs, as witness Drs. Magrath, Pearse, Cole, and Shaw, we question whether they will easily find again to represent them one possessed in so marked a degree those qualities so necessary to represent his own, and work harmoniously with the chiefs of other departments of the State. Dr. Mackenzie has not been a mere presidency man, passing his time in the good things of the service, and then obtaining before his time his inspectorship by force of local interest. He has seen good service, in most places where during his time a Madras officer has had a chance. He was, we believe, field surgeon with Sir Hugh Rose in his memorable campaign of Central India; and during a number of years passed with the Nizam's Army has seen a great deal of desultory warfare. He has been decorated not only with a war medal, but with the Order of the Bath, and Star of India. His departure will be a source of regret not only to society generally and officers of his own service, amongst whom he leaves many warm friends, but to the subordinates of the department, to whom he has ever been a firm friend and impartial administrator. He is a good specimen of a glorious old service, which has produced many able and zealous men, and few if any more able, more zealous, or more courteous than William Mackenzie.—Madras Times, April 1.

ESCAPE FROM PRISON.—The soldier Picking, of H.M.'s 49th Regiment, who was under confinement at Asseerghur for the murder of a native with great cruelty, has effected his escape, along with two other men of the corps. They are supposed to have gone towards the native States of Bhopal or Malwah. A reward has been offered by Captain Fraser, District Superintendent of Police, Khundwah, for Picking's apprehension. Picking is a man of six feet in height. How do the military authorities account for his escape?

INDUS VALLEY RAILWAY.—A writer at Kurrachee alludes to the long-talked of Indus Valley Railway, by saying that it is even yet undecided whether the Government or the Sind Railway Company shall undertake the construction of the "missing link." There is a hitch somewhere for some reason. Major General Abbott was expected at Kotree from Lahore last month, to confer with Captain Wood, the agent in Sind, but it is now surmised he will not go there for some time. The subordinate employés on the Sind Valley Railway anticipate that the spirit of economy abroad will shortly touch their interests. The letter before us suggests that instead of "trying to save a few insignificant hundreds by entailing misery upon individuals who have served the Company with zeal and energy for years," the shears should be applied to "useless appointments and establishments, which devour thousands;" to the Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways at Kurrachee, for instance, on a salary of a thousand a month; and to the Examiner of Railway accounts and his expensive establishment. This is all very well in its way, but it is not the way economy is generally secured by officials.

THE BOMBAY ARTILLERY.—The wrongs now being inflicted on the old Bombay Horse Artillery are even more flagrantly unjust than we had anticipated when last writing on this subject. Not only has the E Brigade, R.H.A., disappeared from the Army List, but its staff, with the exception of one lucky Lieutenant-Colonel, is facetiously entered in the last Woolwich List as supernumerary to be absorbed. Now, in the first place, why should the E Brigade be expunged: it is not the "junior" Brigade even on paper, the F is that, and the B (though with the usual disregard of right and justice placed second among H.A. Brigades) is a Brigade of 1864, while the E is playfully entered as "formed" in 1861—formed out of a corps more that 100 years old. Again: the Colonel commanding the E Brigade is senior to all the Colonels of Horse Artillery in India, yet he is to remain supernumerary, although one-half of the new D Brigade is formed out of his Batteries, two of them being transferred to it, and two to the C Brigade at home. Again: on account of two batteries of the old D Brigade having been tacked on to the B Brigade at home, a fourth Lieutenant Colonel was wanted for that Brigade; the natural course would have been, one would suppose, to have sent home a Lieutenant-Colonel belonging to the D Brigade, or one of the "supernumeraries" of the poor E; but no, an officer is taken from the Foot Artillery and pitchforked into the B Brigade, and the supernumerary remains supernumerary still.—Times of India.

DEATH OF TWO MEDICAL OFFICERS.—We regret to announce the death of two surgeons of the Bombay Army—Dr. Kingstone, and Dr. McConnell. Surgeon H. C. Kingstone, B.A., M.B., officiating Deputy Assay Master of the Bombay Mint, entered the service in February, 1856. He graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, and was an officer of considerable attainments and well-known ability. But he was heavily weighted by the disease (consumption) under which he has laboured for years. He had weathered many severe attacks of hœmorrhage from the lungs, but he never rallied from the one that occurred last week, by which great prostration was induced. Dr. Kingstone was in his 42nd year, and died calmly on the evening of Friday, March 31st. Surgeon R. C. McConnell died at the Sanitarium in the Marine Lines on Saturday morning. He entered the service on the same day as Surgeon Kingstone, and stood together on the list. He returned from England little more than a year ago. Dr. McConnell had seen service both in Persia and Abyssinia, and was much liked by a large circle of friends. Of late his health had given way, and, as with his brother, who died some time ago in the service at Kurrachee, it was but too evident that consumption had marked him for its victim. His life might have been prolonged for some time, however, had not partial paralysis set in. A severe attack of hœmorrhage set in on Thursday, and notwithstanding the most unremitting care and attention, he sank at ten o'clock on Saturday morning last. These two officers entered the service on the same day, and, strange coincidence, were buried on the same day in the Sewree cemetery, the same firing party giving them their last salute.—Times of India, April 8.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, April 8.—The market for PIECE GOODS has been very firm, and occasionally sellers have been able to secure a slight advance. The demand has been principally for light makes of SHIRTINGS, MADRAPOLLAMS, JACCONETS, and MULLS. The inquiry for BLEACHED GOODS is still large, JACCONETS and MULLS being again dearer. There is a fair demand for DYED and PRINTED GOODS, at former prices. The market for TURKEY RED GOODS continues strong, at previous rates. In Twist the rates of last mail are barely supported. The market for METALS is very quiet, but values, as a rule, are unchanged.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, April 8.—COTTON: The discouraging accounts respecting Surats, received from Liverpool, have induced the dealers to give way from Rs. 2 to 5 per candy, the greatest reduction being in the lower qualities of Oomrawuttee. The total purchases reported amount to about 13,000 lbs. The arrivals continue to increase, but are not excessive, as compared with the corresponding period of last year. The market was dull at the close. In other articles of export there is no change of importance to notice.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

LEAVE AND ALLOWANCES.

Fort William, March 15.—No. 1,496.—The following financial despatch (No. 41) from the Secretary of State to the Government of India is published for general information :—

The words "with retrospective effect from Aug. 7, 1869," should be added at the end of the note under the proviso to section 7 of the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code.

India-office, Jan. 31.

To H.E. the Right Hon. the Governor general of India in Council.

My Lord,—I have considered in Council your financial letter dated Nov. 30, 1870, No. 256, relative to the minimum rate of furlough allowance under the new rules.

2. You are of opinion that "the reduced minimum bears very hardly upon those members of the service who are affected by it"—namely, those who are compelled by ill-health to take furlough on medical certificate before having served eight years; and you, therefore, request sanction for the restoration of the old minimum rate of furlough pay—viz., £500 per annum.

3. I conclude that you do not intend to lay down in the terms of the 3rd paragraph of rule 7 of the Furlough Rules of 1868 that "no officer on furlough shall draw" less than £500 per annum, but that this minimum rate of furlough pay should be subject to the same proviso as was the minimum rate of absentee allowance during leave on medical certificate under the Rules of 1864—viz., that "in cases in which the salary shall be less than £500 per annum the full salary shall be allowed."

4. On this understanding, I sanction the restoration of the minimum rate of furlough pay under the old rules, with retrospective effect, as proposed by you.—I have, &c., ARGYLL.

March 16.—No. 1,500.—The Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to direct the substitution of the following rule for Rule I. under Section XI. of the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code :—

Subsidiary leave ceases the day before embarkation, and commences the day after debarkation. It cannot be extended on the ground that the vessel in which an officer leaves India or returns to it, touches at some other port in India after the first embarkation, or before the final debarkation.

This rule applies generally.

March 17.—No. 1,607.—The Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to prescribe the following rule, which will be added, as Rule 3A, to the constructions and subsidiary rules under Section VII. of the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code :—

3A. A period during which an officer has been out of employ in India otherwise than as a penalty for misconduct, shall also be omitted from the three years.

No. 1,608.—ERRATUM.—The following words which immediately precede Section XXI. of the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code should be struck out :—

"Section XVIII.—The construction appended is new."

OFFICERS RETURNING FROM FURLOUGH.

The following extract from a memorandum from the military department is republished for information and guidance in the public works department :—

Extract from a Memorandum from Col. H. K. Burne, Sec. to Govt. of India, military department, to the home department, dated Fort William, March 2, No. 64.

Para. 2. An officer can reckon his return from furlough only from the date of his arrival at the port at which he may bona fide disembark with the view of proceeding to join his appointment or regiment; and his landing and reporting himself at Madras on his way to Calcutta to rejoin his appointment in Bengal, North-Western Provinces, &c., cannot, the Gov. gen. in Council considers, be in any sense what is meant by "disembarkation in India," [Furlough Rules of 1868, Rule XVII.] even though the officer should belong to the Madras presidency.

COMMAND OF FORTS—ALLOWANCES.

Head Quarters Camp, Feb. 15.—The following letter is from the Sec. to the Govt. of India, military department, to the Controller of military accounts :—

In reply to your letter, No. 1,646G, dated 16th ult., I am directed to inform you that the allowance for the command of forts, although entered in the list of appointments affixed to G.G.O., No. 156A, dated Oct. 13, 1863, was never intended to be drawn as a staff allowance; and in regard to the Peshawur forts especially, the very object of granting it is to secure the presence of a selected officer. It must, therefore, in all cases be treated strictly as a command allowance, to be drawn by the officer actually in command, and no portion of it by the commandant when on leave other than privilege leave.

POLITICAL EXAMINATIONS.

(From the Bombay Government Gazette of March 9.)

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to order that the covenanted civil service departmental examination according to the lower standard shall, till further notice, be the examination to qualify for gazetted political appointments within the Presidency of Bombay.

2. From the date of this notification all persons who enter the political department in order to hold such gazetted appointments will be admitted as probationers for the term of one year, during which period they will be required to pass this examination. And no person will be confirmed in the department unless favourably reported on by his official superior as regards conduct and general fitness for his duties.

3. Officers who have already entered the political department, but who have not held permanent gazetted appointments for a period of three years, will be required to pass the examination within two years from the date of this notification. Until they shall have passed, they will be shown in the list as probationers; and should they not pass within the prescribed time, they will be liable to be removed from their appointments.

4. Officers who have already entered the political department, but who have not held permanent appointments for a period of six years, will be required to pass an examination within two years from the date of any future promotion. Until they shall have passed, they will be held to be probationers as regards such promotion.

5. Any officer in the service of Government desirous of being examined will submit an application for leave to appear before the central committee, and with his application he will forward a certificate from his official superior to the effect that he is fairly well prepared in the prescribed subjects.

6. The provisions contained in rules Nos. 2 to 4 will, when necessary, be relaxed by order of Government, in special cases, to meet the exigencies of the public service.

EMPLOYMENT OF OFFICERS BY MUNICIPALITIES.

The following paragraphs of a military letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, No. 8, dated Jan. 12, 1871, are published for general information:—

1. I have had under my consideration in Council your Lordship's letter in the Financial Department, dated Nov. 23 last, No. 250, on the subject of the employment of officers by municipalities.

2. In Sir Charles Wood's military despatch of June 30, 1865, No. 215, sanction was given to the acceptance of municipal employment by officers while on authorised leave, provided that the time passed therein did not reckon as service for pension.

* * * * * *

4. You * * solicit authority to place at the disposal of municipal and similar departments the services of officers of the Staff Corps or local service, provided they are not required for civil or military employment under the Government, with the understanding that if any officer so employed desire to count the time thus passed as service for pension he may do so, on the condition that he or his employers must transfer to the Government of India six per cent. of the pay he draws, a proportion which is estimated fully to cover the liability accepted by the Government.

5. I am willing to give my sanction to the proposition of your Government, provided that in no case does the employment of an officer in this manner render necessary, either directly or indirectly, the admission of another officer to the staff corps.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPT. G. R. MILLER, 41ST REGIMENT.

A general court-martial assembled at Mooltan on Jan. 13, when Capt. G. R. Miller, 41st regt., was arraigned on the following charge:—

1. In having, at Subathoo, between June 1, 1869, and October 20, 1870, in disobedience of the Queen's Regulations, paragraph 309, habitually left large sums of company's money in the hands of his pay sergeant, G. D. Hamilton.

2. In having, at Subathoo, between June 1, 1869, and October 20, 1870, been culpably negligent in keeping the accounts of the company under his command, and in the care of the public money entrusted to his charge, in consequence of which neglect, on the date last stated, there was a deficiency of Rs. 580-4-2, or thereabouts, of such public money, for which he, Captain Miller, could not account.

3. In having, at Subathoo, between June 1, 1869, and August 12, 1870, in disobedience of the Bengal Military Regulations, section 48, paragraph 17, borrowed sundry small sums, aggregating Rs. 151-8-8, from his pay sergeant, G. D. Hamilton.

4. In having, at Subathoo, about October 4, 1870, signed the small book of No. 3,854, Private John Cashman, 41st regt., for a savings bank deposit of Rs. 5, the actual amount deposited having been Rs. 45, and which deposit he, Captain Miller, had failed personally to receive, as required by General Order for Queen's troops dated May 6, 1862.

5. In having, at Subathoo, up to October 20, 1870, failed to issue pay for the month of September to the native servants of his company, stoppages for the same having been duly charged in accounts.

The Court found him guilty of the charge in its 1st and 2nd instances, and not guilty in the 3rd, 4th, and 5th instances, and sentenced him to be reprimanded in such manner as H.E. the C. in C. may deem fitting.

The sentence has been confirmed by H.E. Lord Napier of Magdala, who remarks on the case:—"Captain Miller has been guilty of culpable neglect of duty in connection with the accounts and payment of his company, which resulted in a deficiency of public money, and other serious irregularities. Captain Miller is acquitted of the third instance of the charge—viz., of borrowing money from his pay sergeant; but the evidence which acquits him of this charge, and his own defence, show that he had rendered himself liable to be tried for the graver offence of temporarily misappropriating for his private use part of the public money entrusted to him for the payment of his company."

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The sitting on Friday, April 21, of which brief notice was made in our last issue, began with the resumed examination of Sir Robert Montgomery, who advanced additional testimony to the operation of the land settlements in the North-West Provinces, under the Hon. Mr. Bird's administration and that of Mr. Thomason. The Hon. Mr. Thomason worked out Mr. Bird's regulations in 1846. This settlement was for twenty years, and leases began to fall in about 1862. In Goruckpore the revenue, he calculated, has, under the new settlement made for thirty years, increased by £80,000 over the £240,000, which was the total revenue under Mr. Bird's settlement, although the rate has been lowered from two-thirds to one half only of the net rental. Twenty years hence there should be another large increase. Under the late orders from England a good many of the best tilled estates will no doubt be permanently settled. These orders do not apply to lands likely to benefit from irrigation. There are very few sales of waste land, most of it being included in estates. Revenue was benefited in about equal proportions by the rise in prices for produce, and the extending of cultivation. The total amount of assessment in the North West Provinces is about £4,000,000. It had increased from three millions to four millions. Under the former settlement great injustice was done to the Talookdars. The cultivation of the land improved with facilities afforded. The increase in Goruckpore was due to the cultivation of much waste land. The permanen settlement would not suit the North-Western Provinces, and he was opposed to the policy of its introduction. The system had been productive of many millions of loss to the revenues of India, and did not suit modern means of stimulating tillage. The usual size of small tenancies was about four acres in the North-West Provinces. Proposals for a license-tax, a marriage-tax, and a wheel-tax were talked of as probable resorts of a Government in need of money. He thought the licence-tax would prove a vexatious one unless the people were consulted about it. The natives have no voice in revenue questions, nor can the Legislative Council set aside "Orders in Council" sent out from Westminster. He was against selling lands rent free, as a rule ; but, when sold, the proceeds ought to be invested for the benefit of the country. The material condition of the people was good, and it improved. The country exports cloth, metals, sugar, grains, and cotton. The produce was sent to the best market, and the producers were now on such good terms with the consumers that commercial prosperity had arisen and was increasing. The ryots were opposed to rates for roads and railways, canals, and water. The agriculturists were poor, and could not afford to pay cesses. Agriculture had, however, been improved, and would become in time profitable enough to allow of the special cesses mentioned. Some cultivators were endeavouring to improve their land with manures. The natives had little idea of European agriculture. But they would take advantage of any modern means of farming if shown the way. Under a mild assessment and a good title the cultivators prospered ; and if their labour was assisted by capital it would be still more productive. If improvements were introduced by the owners of the lands the cultivators would participate in the benefits. The present mode of assessment has not been completed. A report was preparing. He had heard of proposals for a local consultative body to examine into taxation ; if it was formed he thought it should be nominated by qualified parties, and not by vote or open election, as the natives would not be able to comprehend our electoral system.

Strangers were here ordered to withdraw. On our return we found Sir Charles Wingfield, M.P., late First Commissioner of Oude, and successor to Sir Robert Montgomery, under examination. He gave evidence on the leasing of lands and farms in Oude under the three years' settlement of 1850, and the resettlement for thirty years from 1860. The early part of his testimony went to confirm the statements of Sir Robert Montgomery relative to the condition of the Talookdars as contrasted with that of the ryots. There was a native agent who intervened between the farmers and the revenue collectors. Since 1860 revenue from the lands had rapidly improved ; revenue had reached £1,500,000. The Talookdars enjoyed privileges under assessment. The population of Oudh was eleven millions. This gave 466 people to the square mile. Fifty-four per cent. of the land was under cultivation. Sir Charles Wood's Order in Council caused large quantities of the land to be sold by auction. It fetched about 5s. an acre. Much of this land had reverted to Government through the purchasers becoming bankrupt.

The committee resumed its sittings on Tuesday, the 25th inst., and the examination of Sir Charles Wingfield, M.P., was continued. The tenure and privileges enjoyed by the Talookdars of Oude were examined into, and also those of the ryots. Between 1803 and 1840 we assessed the land to the extent of two-thirds of the rent ; we now obtain 50 per cent. In 1862 the land revenue for all India was nineteen millions, it was now twenty millions. The land was paid for in silver (rupees). This currency had itself in course of time become depreciated. The depreciation of silver had led the Government to impose fresh taxes. The Government auction sales of waste lands were impolitic. They in thus selling deprived themselves for ever of revenue which might accrue for the sake of the capital raised by the sales. The money was wanted, not the land. The money was not applied, witness believed, to the reduction of the public debt of India. Sales of waste lands had been effected under the Order in Council of 1862. The purchasers were released from taxes. The order of Sir Charles Wood certainly ought to be immediately rescinded, as it was doing much harm on all sides.

Mr. Phillimore, of the Revenue department in the India Office, was then called and examined in reference to the administration of the forests in India. He stated that for a number of years the forests were very much neglected. In 1846 Dr. Gibson was appointed to look after those in the Presidency of Bombay. In 1855 Mr. Brandis took charge of Pegu, and in 1856 Dr. Cleghorn was nominated to Madras. In 1862 Mr. Brandis, a German, of special qualifications, was appointed to consider how a separate department could be organised for the whole of India, and from that date the administration had gone on improving, and departments were formed in all the great provinces, with conservators and assistants under them. The area of the forests in the Central Provinces was 21,000 square miles, in Burmah 2,400 square miles, and in Assam 4,000 square miles. They were training young men in France and Germany for the forest work, and it was intended to train natives for it as soon as that could be done. The gross receipts from the forests for the whole of India in 1863-4 were £304,443; the budget estimate for 1871-2 was £573,200; and the charges £451,000. The expenses would be diminished in future years, when they could employ the natives, but there could be no training school for natives for this employment in India till they had got a forest so managed as to show what a forest should be, and a sufficient number of skilled officers to instruct them. They had not got such officers now. In reply to a question as to legal difficulties, the witness said that there was a Bill before the legislature which would meet all the requirements. He had no estimate of the future production of the forests, and the Conservator of Canara said the revenue would be much increased. The conservators had instructions not to consider revenue as the main object, but the production of timber of better kinds in larger quantities, and to maintain a permanent supply.

The witness was examined at considerable length by Mr. Fawcett and other members of the committee as to the different items of receipts, but he could only refer to the annual report of each province sent from India. He had not, he said, gone into details. The revenue, he admitted, had increased two-thirds, while the expenditure had increased two and a half times. The object of the home management was to exercise the usual control over the Government of India, and see that things were properly done, and to take steps for training the men and sending them out to India. The scientific management of the forests in India was as yet quite in its infancy.

Dr. Cleghorn was next called, and stated that he went to Madras in 1842 in the medical department. In 1852 he was appointed Professor of Botany in the Medical College. In 1856 he was requested by Lord Harris to draw up a scheme for arranging a forest department for his presidency. In 1861 he was directed by Lord Canning to proceed to the Punjab to introduce the same system there, and to examine and report upon the forests in that province, and for two years he was associated with Mr. Brandis in drawing up a scheme for all India. When he was requested to draw up a scheme for Madras in 1856 the forests were exhausted, the railways were at a standstill for want of sleepers, beams could not be supplied for the Wellington barracks, and the Ordnance Department had the greatest difficulty in obtaining timber for gun carriages. A few probationary assistants were appointed year by year in the collectorates, until the Presidency was gradually overtaken and a department formed. He was the first conservator, with three assistants, three deputy-assistants, and a few native subordinates. His business was to go to the different collectorates and ascertain what forests existed, what were worth preserving, and to propose to the local government how to treat them. In the original surveys, forests were included under the term "waste," and until within the last few years there were no forest demarcations. A forest demarcation was now going on. There was little revenue from forests at that time, and they required to be demarcated, cattle to be excluded to be put under regulation, trees to be planted, and other necessary steps taken. Nor was there any check then as to the number of trees cut down, and the supply of timber was very inadequate and very uncertain. He made regulations as to the number of trees to be left per acre, and that the trees should be marked in the first-class forests. It was intended that everything, regulating the supply of the timber, should be done by the Government, the felling and fetching by contract. In Madras the forests were already much improved, there was a steadily increasing revenue, and there had been a great diminution of waste. There was a greater apparent profit in granting licences, but there was greater waste. He believed that there was great advantage in the present organisation. There was a much greater stock of timber in all the depots. The necessity for new planting, for improving the forest roads, blasting rocks in the streams, &c., had caused a great present outlay, but he expected that would be recouped. He had been applied to by three or four native chiefs to draw up rules for the management of their forests. The Rajah of Travancore had adopted them for the management of the forests in his dominion. They had introduced hand-saws and machinery for the purpose of superseding the axe. The same system had been extended to the North-West and the Punjab, but the extraordinary demand for timber for the new railways had led to a diminution in the number of trees. Formerly any person brought away ivory, gums, resins, cardamoms, beeswax, and other productions of the forest, as he pleased; but now these products in some of the provinces were put up to auction, and he anticipated a considerable increase of revenue from that source as the forests were brought under control and systematic management. The importance of the Indian forests in a physical and economical point of view was first taken up by the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Edinburgh (1850), and it had been shown in several countries that by the neglect of the forests the climate was becoming more arid. They were in a much more favourable condition now. No licences for cutting down timber were granted now in the first-class forests, and for other forests the licences were more restricted. On the whole, he thought the licensing system objectionable.

The committee then adjourned.

Miscellaneous.

Bank of India, Australia, and China.—Mr. T. A. Mitchell, M.P., has retired from the Board of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China; and Mr. Andrew Cassels has been elected the chairman of the Bank for the ensuing year.

Hard Lines.—In paying the dividends on Thursday on the India Four per Cent. Transferable Stock, formerly known as the "Sicca Loan," the Bank of England officials, acting on instructions from Somerset House, deducted income-tax at the rate of 2 1-5 per cent., the rate proposed by Mr. Lowe in his Budget speech. The dividend became due on the 25th ult. To most of the stockholders, accustomed to the simple reckonings under the old arrangement, this unexpected introduction of the decimal system caused a good deal of surprise and annoyance.

The Estate of the late Major-General William Lang.—The Court of Exchequer was occupied on Friday with a case in which the Commissioners of Inland Revenue sought to recover certain legacy duty which they claim to be payable in respect of the personal estate of Major-General William Lang, deceased, which the defendants declined to pay on the ground that the deceased was at the time of his death domiciled in India. The deceased was in the Bombay Army, and after a long service in India he came to this country on leave of absence, and shortly after his return went again to India, but came home again after a short service on leave for three years on private affairs. During the deceased's residence in this country he resided at Rossie House, in Perthshire, as tenant from year to year, keeping carriages, horses, servants, &c., and in this house he died a bachelor on the 3rd of January, 1870. The question for the Court was whether, at the time of his death, he had an Indian or a Scotch domicile. The Court took time to consider judgment.

Military.—Woolwich, April 25.—His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has issued an order directing that a board of officers shall answer confidentially the following questions with respect to every candidate for the Staff College:—"Is his conduct marked by steadiness and prudence, and is he temperate in his habits? Is he extravagant in his mode of living? Does he display zeal, activity, and intelligence, as well as discretion, in the performance of his duties, and does he appear to take an interest in his profession? Report any other characteristic of the officer which renders him suited or otherwise for the duties of a staff officer. Is his disposition such as would enable him to perform those duties with tact and discrimination, in a manner calculated to ensure their being cheerfully carried out by those to whom orders would be conveyed by him? or are his manner and temper objectionable, and likely to cause him to disagree with those with whom he might be associated or brought in contact? Is he active and energetic in his habits? Is he a good (fair or indifferent) rider, and is he short-sighted?"

The Great Tunnel through the Alps.—A traveller, who lately passed through the Mont Cenis tunnel, coming from Italy, furnishes the Mont Blanc of Annecy (Savoy) with the following particulars:—He passed from Bardoneche to the point of junction of the two galleries in less than a quarter of an hour, in a train employed in removing the materials excavated. The way is not yet constructed in its whole width for about a hundred yards in the centre, where blasting operations are still going on. But with that exception the double line is completed, and nothing more remains to be done but to replace the temporary rails by permanent ones. The middle of the excavation forms a culminating point, a slope of two in a hundred having been provided on each side for drainage, so that it is consequently from 230 to 250 metres above the level of the entrances. The temperature is still very high, but that circumstance is accounted for by the necessity of still keeping closed the gates constructed for the requirements of the service, and which are only opened after an explosion to let the smoke escape. The fact has been remarked, that when the door is thrown open the current of air is rapidly established, and always in the direction of France to Italy. No one can pass over the line without a permission from the principal engineers, in order not to impede the progress of the works, which are expected to be completed in June next, and the inauguration to take place in July.

YOUNG RECRUITS.—A letter in the Times, which is signed "A Deputy Inspector-General," contains this passage:—I will give you the history of such recruits, hundreds of whom have passed through my hands. The very sergeants who present them are ashamed of them. I remember asking an old Caffir war man, "What is the use of that lad as a soldier? Do you suppose you could ever get him to the banks of the Kee?" The reply was, "Lord! no, Sir; we should leave him in a roadside ditch long before we got that length." Such recruits are with difficulty got through their drill; they are too weak for it, and for their musket and accoutrements. They drink to keep up their strength, they get palpitation of the heart, they are shipped off, say to the Mediterranean or India, either die like flies or get invalided after a year or so, stay best part of another year in hospital, and are then discharged penniless to give the service a bad name far and wide. There is no regimental surgeon who will not tell you that it is ruinous folly to send lads to soldier in India. The expenses first and last of recruiting such weeds far exceed what would enable us to command first-rate men, but the public only looks to the first cost, loses sight of the recruit, and never thinks or knows the mode of tracking the sums paid for his passage out and home, pay while ineffective, medical treatment, diet, wine, &c. The writer adds:—We want a military Carlyle to show up the shams of our army on its present system. Men who have never made themselves familiar with our soldiery, who have never viewed things from the private's point of view, theorize and plan fine schemes for what they think he would like, all the while knowing as little of his inner life as the drawing-room does of the servants' hall.

OUR BURMAN VISITORS.—The party of four Burmese noblemen who have had so distinguished a reception in London during the last few weeks arrived in Manchester on Sunday evening, April 23, from London, and have taken up their quarters in the Palatine Hotel. The names of the gentlemen are as follows:—Maha Menla Kyoden, Payden Woon, secretary to his Majesty the King of Burmah, who is chief of the party; Nay Myo Menlha Thankarah, Mong Mhew, officer of the household to his Majesty the King of Burmah; Nay Myo Men deno Thooring, Moung oung Thoo, officer of the body-guard of the King of Burmah; and Nay Myo Kyo-Den Say-thoo, Waz Zeray, assistant secretary to the King. They are accompanied by Captain Sprye, who, as envoy, introduces them to visitors, and explains many of the novelties which attract their attention to this country. The Woon, although not formally commissioned as an ambassador, comes among us in official capacity with the special authority of his King, who is anxious to cultivate peaceful relations and extended commerce with Britain. One of the first objects of the Woon's mission was to convey to our Prime Minister from the King of Burmah a royal letter and distinguished decoration of honour, which Mr. Gladstone, with the permission of her Majesty, graciously accepted recently at a reception in his private residence. The length of the stay which the party will make in this country must depend upon the instructions they receive from their own Government, to whom they regularly report, for the information of their fellow-countrymen, what strikes them as most remarkable in their English tour. They will probably remain in Manchester for about a week, and will next visit Liverpool.

POPULAR EDUCATION IN INDIA.—At the Society of Arts, on Tuesday evening, Mr. W. Tayler read a paper to the members of the East India Association on Popular Education in India. We gleaned therefrom the following particulars. There are about 2,000 zillah schools in British India. The education of the people has shaped its course under an important Despatch of the Court of Directors of the East India Company, issued in 1854. This despatch was the Charter of the Education movement, and on it Mr. Tayler stated he had founded his paper. There was great apathy among Indian parents regarding the education of their children on the European system. The system adopted made no sufficient provision for religious, or even moral instruction. When at Patna, occupied in education, he (Mr. Tayler) had once asked a native boy, a pupil in a zillah school, whether he would confess or deny a fault committed. The boy replied stoutly that he would "deny it," and was applauded by the whole school for doing so. The anecdote was brought forward simply to indicate the tone of morals prevailing among the native children. The European system did not implant principles suitable to the native mind; while the instruction positively acted to unsettle the minds of Indian children and render them dissatisfied with their condition in life, and disqualified for the due performance of their domestic and social duties. The total absence of moral training was the greatest blot of all. In the case of females this defect was peculiarly harmful. The Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen had said, "If you desired to give female education in India do not omit to infuse into the female mind purity of idea." This dictum expressed exactly what was wanted in the Indian schools; an education regardful of the principles of virtue. The whole system of the instruction was defective and of a mistaken kind as applied to the native character. The lecturer proceeded to read from the notes of an inspector of a Zillah School with 120 boys. The passages read showed the superficiality of the education imparted. The way in which the native pupil was taught to read English or classical poetry, and the unfitness of the poetical lessons selected were pointed out. Poetry was put into the hands of children which was too elevated in sentiment for the pupil ever to comprehend, or if it was love-poetry the native mind caught at the gross-er ideas without comprehending the spirit of the poet. Of this illustrations were given by reading some warm and licentious verses which had been put into the hands of a boy to study at the school. Mr. Tayler stated that he had studied education in India and had established a school at Patna, in which better instruction was inculcated. The school he had established on new principles of education was ultimately given up through his (Mr. Tayler's) retirement and return to England. The method of education sought to be carried out by Mr. Tayler had been published in the form of a pamphlet. The system was directed to impart practical education of a kind that should be useful to the pupils in after life; such as a knowledge of agriculture and agricultural implements, gardening, improved modes of irrigation, &c. The school established at Patna in 1857 included a model farm and a museum of instructive objects, selected as suitable to suggest the modes in which agriculture was carried on in more civilised countries like England. The Patna model school was a school of practical science as well as of ordinary education. The school had been established by native liberality as regarded the supply of funds. Although the model school had been discontinued, he (Mr. Tayler) still hoped to find his system returned to in India. It had been approved by the highest authorities; it had been found to work well, and therefore he hoped to see the experiment of model schools revived. In the discussion that followed the speakers agreed in the main with the objects of the paper read, but objections were raised to the statements that had been put forward with regard to the deficiencies of the natives of India in morals and religion. The expression made use of in the paper that the native female mind was susceptible of "impurity of thought" was complained of by two native gentlemen who addressed the society. Mr. Elliot, Dr. Wilson, Mr. Lawrie, and Mr. Nasmyth joined in the debate; but the general tone of their remarks, though it approved of Mr. Tayler's educational method, was opposed to the severity of the criticism of Indian institutions contained in the paper read.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, April 24.—ARMY REGULATION BILL.—Mr. CARDWELL announced the following alteration in this Bill, namely, to leave out the number of sales of commission that should be made in the one year, and to substitute justices for lord-lieutenants.

THE ABOLITION OF PURCHASE.—In reply to Sir J. HAY, Mr. CARDWELL stated that the Army Regulation Bill did not affect colonels who had become generals under the present system, and provided no compensation for them. With regard to the honorary colonelcies, he had already stated that when this subject was dealt with, the interests of the honorary colonels would have to be considered.

THE COST OF EUROPEAN RECRUITS FOR INDIA.—Colonel SYKES asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether, as recruits for India were produced at the East India Company's depot at Warley at a much cheaper rate than was now charged to the Government of India, measures would be taken to protect the taxpayers of India, and whether the depot at Warley could not be re-established.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: No change in the existing arrangements is at present contemplated by the Secretary of State for India in Council. With regard to the Warley depot all matters connected with recruiting belong to the department of the Secretary of State for War, but I may say that I do not see how, even if the Warley depot were re-established, it could be re-established on the same economical footing as formerly, seeing that the article supplied to India by the War Office is a more costly article than that supplied in old times.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, April 25.—NEW ROUTE TO INDIA.—Sir G. JENKINSON gave notice for the 23rd May to call attention to a proposed plan of establishing a new route to India by way of the Euphrates Valley.

THE SOOSUNG RAJAH OF BENGAL.—Gen. FORESTER asked the First Lord of the Treasury, with reference to a statement made by him that the phrase "political plea" was not known at the India office, whether his attention had been drawn to the case of the Soosung Rajah of Bengal; and whether he would grant a committee to investigate the question of the administration of justice in regard to that portion of her Majesty's Indian subjects who were exposed to such rules of procedure.—Mr. GLADSTONE stated that his attention had been called to the subject. It appeared to him that the gallant officer overlooked an important distinction—namely, between the use of the "political plea" in legal litigation and advancing it as a ground for political legislative measures. What he had referred to were not executive but legislative proceedings. In reply to the question of whether the Government would grant a committee, it had not as yet been in his power to make adequate inquiry in the Indian department. He should, however, consult the Secretary of State, and would make the result of the consultation known to the gallant officer.

RETIREMENT IN THE INDIAN ARMY.—Colonel ANSON asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he was aware that the retirements of the officers of the Indian army cost no less than £880,000 a year, according to the report in the Times of General Norman's financial statement.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that the gallant officer seemed to labour under some mistake as to the duties of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The question to which he alluded was not departmental, and had only been concurred in by him in common with the rest of his colleagues. He had, however, asked the Secretary of State for War, and had received the information which had before been given to the House. His right hon. friend had told him that he had no data upon which a calculation could be made. As to the statement in the Times respecting the retirement of Indian officers, he was not aware of the statement in the Times; he was not aware that it was correct, and neither was he aware that it was his duty to be in any way aware of it. (A laugh.)

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

TRADE RETURNS.—The Trade and Navigation Returns for December 1870-71, and for the nine months ending December 1870-71, as compared with the two previous years, have just been published. The total value of imports, foreign (excluding treasure) were in 1870-71, nine months ending December, Bengal—Rs. 13,25,10,270, against Rs. 10,97,94,060 in 1869-70, and Rs. 13,41,92,114, in 1868-69. In Bombay there was a slight falling off in 1870-71 from 1869-70, and a considerable falling off as compared with 1868-69. In Sind the falling off has been very considerable, through the whole three years. In Madras there has been an improvement, and in Burmah a slight falling off as compared with last year, but a considerable one as compared with 1868-69. In exports Bengal shows Rs. 15,63,67,083, in 1870-71, as against Rs. 14,49,15,998, in 1869-70, and Rs. 15,75,25,409, in 1868-69. Bombay has exported a total value of Rs. 19,03,69,190 in 1870-71, as compared with Rs. 17,35,01,258 in 1869-70, and Rs. 16,36,73,674 in 1868-69. Sind is higher, and Madras considerably lower. Burmah is higher than in 1869-70, but lower than in 1868-69. The intermediate year was an exceptionally bad one, almost throughout India.

THE LAKE AT NYNEE TAL.—The Pioneer says:—"Those of our readers who were disturbed in mind by the mysterious discolouration of the waters of the Nynee Tal Lake, may now congratulate themselves upon the mystery being happily solved. A specimen of the water was submitted by Dr. Cunningham to Dr. Lewis, an able analyst of his staff, and the cause of the appearance ascertained by him to be the presence of vast numbers of a species of animalculæ, well-known as the cause of the phosphorescence of sea-water, and not unfrequently also found in rivers and lakes in Europe. The same phenomenon appears to have been observed under almost the same circumstances in the water in the Phœnix-park at Dublin. Dr. Lewis states, on the authority of Professor Allman, that 'the brown colour was sometimes uniformly diffused through the water; at other times appeared as dense clouds varying from a few square yards to upwards of a hundred in extent. The colour was in some parts of so deep a brown that a white disc, half an-inch in diameter, became invisible when plunged to a depth of three to six inches in the water.' But the comfort of the conclusion lies in the fact that this animalculæ inhabits exclusively clean water, and that its life is incompatible with the existence of decomposing matter. It is very commonly associated with aquatic plants, and, like them, is an index of the goodness of the water rather than of its impurity. The lake, therefore, is still guiltless of the contamination of the bazaar drainage, to which the phenomenon was too hastily set down; and those who visit Nynee Tal this year may do so without any dread of plague or pestilence from this source."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Nothing preserves the health so well as an occasional alterative in changes of weather, or when the nerves are unstrung. These Pills act admirably on the stomach, liver, and kidneys, and so thoroughly purify the blood that they are the most efficient remedy in warding off derangements of the stomach, fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, and other maladies, and giving tone and energy to debilitated constitutions. All who have the natural and laudable desire of maintaining their own and their family's health cannot do better than trust to Holloway's Pills, which cool, regulate, and strengthen. These purifying Pills are suitable for all ages, seasons, climates, and constitutions, when all other means fail, and are the female's best friend.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 15; Agra, April 13; Calcutta and Madras, April 12.

The Indian papers give full reports of the Legislative business done at Allahabad during the Viceroy's stay there on the 6th April. Sir W. Muir delivered a clear and able Budget statement on the introduction of Mr. Inglis's Bill to supplement the Imperial grants for local purposes. His Honour's complaints of the unequal scale on which those grants had been distributed were answered "jauntily" by Sir R. Temple, and with grave courtesy by Mr. John Strachey, who appealed to Sir William's "excellent Budget" itself as a proof that the North-West Provinces had not been unkindly treated. Lord Mayo in his turn took up the defence of the Government, complimented Sir W. Muir on his general programme, and averred his satisfaction at the growing interest taken by natives in the work of their Municipal Committees, although he shook his head at Sir William's proposal to form a local Legislature of native representatives.

THE Local Taxation Bill for the North-West proposes to meet a deficiency of £100,000 in local revenue by extending the local and acreage cesses. Sir W. Muir showed how by stern reduction of outlay he would be able to dispense with the License Tax altogether. The great speech of the meeting was Mr. F. Stephen's, who at great length proved, in answer to the pleas of the Benares zemindars, that the Permanent Settlement of 1793, while forbidding any increase of the land-tax, had never intended to burden other parts of the empire with the cost of necessary improvements in the permanently settled provinces. If ever India came to possess a representative government, it might then be open to the natives to revise the settlement which had now been faithfully respected for seventy-eight years, but a purely English Government was debarred entirely from such a step. The right of Government however to tax its subjects was "entirely collateral to the permanent settlement," which merely gave the zemindar a freehold tenure subject to the rent-charge due to Government. The right of taxing property for public purposes arose from the very fact of the existence of a Government. It was the height of absurdity to suppose that Lord Cornwallis or any other reasonable being ever meant to exempt property from its chief liability by the very measure which called that property into existence. The general right to tax was one thing, and the Government's share in the ownership of the soil was quite another. If you once consider any property as privileged from taxation for the demands of the State, you deny its right to share in the general protection of property by the State. And how, asked Mr. Stephen, "could it be said that a tax causes a diminution of the annual profits of land, when we distinctly pledge ourselves to lay it out on the construction and repair of roads, on the maintenance of police, schools, wells, and other works conducive to public health, comfort, and convenience?"

FROM Allahabad Lord Mayo proceeded to Lucknow, not to enter it in state according to his previous purpose, but to pay a brief visit of condolence to General Barrow, the Chief Commissioner, whose sudden illness had caused a temporary change in the Viceroy's plans. If General Barrow continued to mend, as he was doing by last accounts, his Lordship might still return in state to Lucknow.

THE results of the inquiry into the misconduct of the 19th Madras N.I., as reported by the Indian papers, tally with the real contents of the telegram received here a few weeks ago, except that both the wing officers are to share the penalty of the Commandant and Adjutant.

IT is satisfactory to learn from General Norman's exposition that the general health of the troops in 1870 was good. For Bengal the death-rate of the year averaged only 21½ per thousand, although in some districts fever had been very rife. Cholera on the other hand had slain comparatively few. The healthiest stations in the plains were Muttra, Shahjehanpore, Seetapore, and Roorkie, all in Upper India, where the death-rates stood respectively at 5½, 6½, 7½, and 9½ per thousand. Even at Fort William the rate had fallen to 12½ per thousand, which contrasts favourably with the 32 per thousand at Morar, the 33 per thousand at Peshawar, and the 40 per thousand at Jubbulpore. It would seem from this that the highest figures belong to the largest stations. At the hill-stations the average stood at 11 per thousand. It is to be hoped that the new hill-station of Pachmari will tend to keep down the future mortality at Jubbulpore, while the coming reduction of the Peshawar garrison and the forming of a small sanitarium in the neighbouring hills will do the same good office to the worst reputed of our frontier stations. Can nothing be done for Morar also, which has long borne an ill name? The returns from Madras and Bombay, when received, will doubtless prove yet more favourable on the whole than those from Bengal.

WE are glad to hear that no time is being lost in completing the new hill-stations of Chakrata and Ranikhet. During the next hot season General Norman hopes to see as many as 6,438 men cantoned in the hills of the Bengal Presidency alone. Last year there were 1,170 soldiers employed on working parties in the hills, to the great general advantage of themselves and the State. There is no intention however of giving up important strategic points or good barracks attached to healthy stations in the plains. With regard to the barrack question a return to common sense was announced in the resolution of last December, which ruled that in dry and healthy places with a light drainable soil one-storeyed barracks might henceforth be built on basements properly raised from the ground, instead of the inconvenient and costly sun-traps which may still be required for damp climates and low sites.

In his statement regarding the Indian Public Works, Colonel Strachey avowed that no other branch of Indian finance caused the Government so much real anxiety as the guaranteed railway system. Lord Mayo's speech of March 31 bears out the Colonel's avowal, with regard at least to the pressure of such anxiety. The reasons alleged for it are the growth of the yearly charge for guaranteed interest, the general decline of railway traffic during the last two or three years, and the great difference between the guaranteed percentage and the actual yearly profits. In three years, says Colonel Strachey, the net charge for guaranteed interest has risen from £1,547,000 to £1,857,000. In the second year in fact it was even higher. In the same period the net earnings have increased only by £150,000, although, as Lord Mayo notes, some 800 more miles have meanwhile been opened. The net receipts of all the lines taken together make up only three per cent. on the outlay. One railway only, the East Indian, shows a steady increase of nearly half-a-million tons of goods traffic in four years. The Great Indian Peninsular, on the other hand, which with 815 miles open in 1867 carried 1,046,000 tons, last year, with 1,200 miles open, carried only 1,057,000 tons. On the Madras lines the numbers for the two years were respectively 373,000 and 354,000, in spite of the greatly augmented mileage. On the Sindh line the figures have fallen from 201,000 to 80,000 tons, and on the Southern of India from 70,000 to 66,000 tons. The native passenger traffic shows no greater proportional advance than the goods traffic, which on all the lines has risen only from 2,900,000 to 3,500,000 tons. The whole traffic on about 4,800 miles of railway now amounts to 4,700,000 tons, or about one fourth of that on the London and North-Western line, whose mileage is less by three-quarters.

Even the million tons a-year carried by the East Indian Railway seems to Lord Mayo a sorry total compared with the ten millions carried on an English line of nearly equal length, the Midland Railway. Still greater is the contrast he sets forth between the 300,000 tons carried on the Madras lines and the 1,200,000 on the London and South-Western. He calculates that on six of the smaller Indian lines an annual saving of three-quarters of a million might have been effected had these lines been built on the narrow-guage system. According to Colonel Strachey, the 5,000 miles of rail already sanctioned under a guage of 3 ft. 3 in. should cost "less than one-third of the average cost of all the existing lines," while even a double line of that width would cost hardly more than the cheapest of the present broad-guage lines. Lord Mayo scouts the notion of continuing to build in India "railways stronger and bigger in every respect" than those which carry many times their weight of traffic in this country. He is for "railways at £6,000 or £7,000 a mile or no railways at all." Such lines, in his opinion, will answer every possible purpose for many years to come. If a gentleman bought an elephant to carry a donkey-load, would not his friends regard him in the light of a donkey? Such is the illustration—rather hard on the donkey—with which his Lordship clinches his arguments against the broad-guage for Indian railways. We cannot say that his conclusions have no warrant in the present state of things. If the railway statistics of the last fifteen years are a fair test of the progress we may look for in the next fifteen, the narrow-guage system should have been adopted from the first. But is it quite clear that the next ten or fifteen years will merely repeat the experiences of the last? Have the Indian railways had time as yet to prove their incapacity to develop traffic at a remunerative rate? We are inclined to think that the Viceroy takes too gloomy a view of this particular question. Be that as it may however, he is right in using every possible means of keeping the yearly charge for guaranteed interest within safe bounds, and we can but hope that the new guage of his election will prove the best and cheapest for India in the long run.

In the sphere of irrigation, Lord Mayo is equally bent on enforcing a wise economy. He insists that the land which benefits by irrigation-works shall contribute the largest share to the cost of making them, and desires, so far as we understand his somewhat cloudy phrases, to make each province pay for its own works. The Canal Bill, he regrets to say, has not been so favourably received by the public as he could wish. Everybody, he observed, "seems to desire irrigation, but many seem to desire that somebody else should pay for it"—a tendency, by the way, which may sometimes be noticed in countries nearer home.

In his able speech on the Bill for defining and amending the law of evidence, Mr. F. Stephen pointed out the absolute need of giving the judge a wide discretion in the conduct of all trials, especially criminal ones. In England, where the judge is always aided by a well-educated bar, his work may well be limited to deciding questions between the opposing counsel. But in India this state of things does not yet exist, and the judge in most cases must virtually conduct the trial himself:—

> In all cases he has to represent the interests of the public much more distinctly than he does in England. In many cases he has to get at the truth, or as near to it as he can, by the aid of collateral inquiries, which may incidentally tend to something relevant, and it is most unlikely that he should ever wish to push an inquiry needlessly or to go into matters not really connected with it.

Mr. Stephen has therefore proposed to arm him with a general power to ask any questions upon facts of any witness at any stage of the proceedings, without regard to the ordinary rules of evidence. The Bill distinctly calls upon the judge, especially in criminal cases, not only to listen to evidence brought before him, but to do his best by judicious inquiry towards eliciting the truth. We commend this wholesome principle to those who in this country have remained content with the ridiculous theory that a prisoner should under no circumstances be allowed to criminate himself in a court of law. The notion of regarding criminal proceedings "mainly in the light of private questions between the prosecutor and the prisoner" is certainly unsuited to India. How much less suitable should it be to England, where judges sit in the full blaze of public criticism, and counsel for the defence have nearly unbounded license to bully the witnesses on the other side!

In the same Bill Mr. F. Stephen has embodied certain rules for the future guidance of Courts of Appeal. Henceforth a mere mistake in procedure will not be allowed to destroy the value of work properly done in a Lower Court. Whenever such a mistake is shown to have been committed, the Appellate Court, instead of upsetting the judgment of the Lower Court, shall "either strike out what is redundant, or supply what is defective, as the case may be." Here we have another triumph of common sense, the true alpha and omega of all law-making, over that legal formalism under which common sense comes in time to lie buried. How much time will be saved, and how greatly the ends of justice will be furthered by such limitations to the work of the Higher Courts, we need not say.

According to latest telegrams Shere Singh's turbulent son, Yakoob Khan, has attacked, and is even said to have taken, Herat.

If good sense and accuracy of statement were the usual characteristics of after-dinner speeches, we might have reason to wonder at Mr. Lowe's eccentric utterances on the occasion of his dining with the Civil Engineers, and to ask why such a man could not do full justice to the claims of modern physical science, without wholesale disparagement of those studies in which he himself is known to have excelled. As things are however, his tremendous onslaught on those old-world Greeks to whom the nineteenth century owes nearly all its progress in every field of knowledge and mental labour, must have caused intense amusement to not a few, we hope, of his educated countrymen. No reader at any rate of the Saturday Review has any longer an excuse for accepting Mr. Lowe's wild flights of froward fancy as serious statements of known facts. The wonderful absurdity of ranking the battle of Marathon with a "good colliery accident," merely because the victors in the one case lost no more lives than the victims in the other, needs no further comment on our part. But we may be allowed to add from Indian history one or two fresh illustrations of Mr. Lowe's absurd thesis. In point of lives lost for example a "good colliery accident" might easily surpass the cost at which Clive won the battle of Plassey. His "butcher's bill" amounted to only seventy-two killed and wounded, and even his enemy, the Nawab of Bengal, lost no more than three hundred men out of his sixty thousand. Therefore a victory which laid the foundation of our Indian Empire is, on Mr.

Lowe's showing, of less wide importance than a greater loss of life caused by a single colliery explosion in our own country. Let us take another trifling affair, the battle of Goojrat, which sealed the doom of the Punjab and placed in our hands the means of saving India eight years afterwards. Here the loss of the conquerors was only ninety-two killed, about half the number slain in that ridiculous affair of Marathon which saved free Hellas from Eastern despotism. What then, according to Mr. Lowe's reasoning, is such an incident compared with the recent foundering of the Captain? If we added the seven hundred wounded, we should only reach the level of the "twice four hundred men" who went down at Spithead in the Royal George. And yet the latter event, however wide-felt at the moment in this country, left no sort of mark upon history, while Goojrat will shape out the whole course of Indian and English history for centuries to come.

Mr. D. Baxter's little volume on "National Debts"—(J. Bush, Charing Cross) contains a good deal of useful information clearly arranged, touching the public debts of all civilised countries, from Great Britain to Morocco. There are also some suggestive chapters on the Progress of Indebtedness, the Growth of Nations, and the need for reducing public debts. Mr. Baxter is evidently a staunch foe to the optimists who regard our national debt as "a mere fleabite." There is much force in his arguments on this subject, and it is well that reduction of debt should keep pace with the development of taxable wealth. A heavy debt like ours has its drawbacks, among which some people might include the obstacles it offers to "a vigorous foreign policy." Less truculent persons will be apt to regard that particular drawback as a blessing in disguise. The steady fall in the value of money and the steady growth of population also tend materially to diminish the real burden. We should have liked to see a little more space devoted to the debt of India than the few lines which trace its rise and progress from 1775 to the present day. It is worth noting however that for twenty-seven years after 1810 the Indian debt remained stationary at £29,000,000. By 1849, the end of the second Sikh war, it had risen to £51,000,000, and since the Mutiny it has doubled itself.

At Friday's sitting the House of Commons Committee on the Albert Arbitration Bill, after examining Mr. Morris, finally passed the preamble of the Bill with only a few verbal amendments.

The Peninsular and Oriental Company have lately added to their large fleet one of the finest vessels owned by any mercantile firm. The Khedive measures 3,600 tons, with engines of 600-horse power. She will accommodate two hundred first, and seventy-five second class passengers, with their baggage and stores, besides taking 2,000 tons of cargo and coal for twenty days. She ran the measured mile last Saturday in Stokes Bay at an average speed of fourteen knots, with no sensible vibration, moving as smoothly as a yacht, to the admiration of all on board. To Messrs. Caird, of Greenock, who have built more sea-going steamers than any firm in the world, was entrusted the entire construction and fitting-up of the Khedive. No expense has been spared on the fittings. She is built largely of iron, has unusual height between decks, and is ventilated in accordance with the latest processes. Her decks are of iron plates overlaid with wood. The saloon looks like a spacious handsomely-furnished dining-room, and the cabins are elegantly fitted up with the newest and most wonderful appliances for comfort and use. Altogether this splendid vessel, the first of many such to come, does great credit to the enterprise of its owners, and proves that the P. and O. Company mean to go on deserving the popularity which their line has so long enjoyed among those who travel by it. The Khedive starts for China at an early date.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, May 9, 1871.

THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

Which of the departments in the Indian Public Service suffers most from the frequent changes introduced into its working by order of Government, we cannot say; but in none, we imagine, has more suffering been caused to individual officers than in the Department of Public Instruction. The salaries and relative rank of educational officers have been so often readjusted, and the rules of promotion so often revised or set at naught, that not a few sufferers have had reason to complain of the consequences to themselves. Up to 1860, for instance, the Head-masters of Colleges ranked next below the Principals and next above the Professors. It was natural therefore that an officer free to choose between the two posts would prefer a Head-mastership to a Professorship, which was then worth about Rs. 100 a-month less. Very shortly afterwards it was officially declared that the Professor should rank above the Head-master, and his pay was accordingly raised from Rs. 350 to Rs. 500 a-month. At the same time an officer who had just before chosen the post of Head-master was not allowed to reconsider a choice made in pure ignorance of the coming change.

A few years later a certain Head-master had been promoted to the rank of an Assistant-Inspector, on a salary of Rs. 600 a-month. He had hardly held his new appointment two months when he was officially informed that his pay would thenceforth be reduced to Rs. 500 a-month. This blow he bore as he best could; but by-and-by the same officer, who had served the Government for many years with unvarying credit and untiring diligence, found himself superseded in his own branch by a gentleman who had never passed in the vernacular of his province, but who happened to be a graduate of some university; as if that alone were qualification enough for work that needed some special training and practical acquaintance with Indian schools. His fortunate rival was afterwards examined,—but by whom? Not by a Board appointed for the purpose, but by the Head of the Department himself. Some other promotions were made in the same province under conditions equally unfair, the supposed rule regarding graduates being enforced or waived at the Inspector General's convenience. The ruler of the Province at length put a stop to the system of informal examinations by ordering that all educational officers should be examined before a Board in Calcutta. But the new order came out too late for the particular sufferer, who had meanwhile transferred his services to another Province.

His new Inspectorship brought him a higher title but no increase of pay, nor yet any security from further supersession.

When the head of his Department went home on leave and one of the Inspectors took his place, the latter's duties were made over to an outsider, a young Lieutenant who had strong personal interest, but no sort of experience in educational work. After fifteen years' service in his Department the Inspector of whom we speak was still earning no more than Rs. 500 a-month, while men much younger in the service were drawing from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,000 a-month. Two Professors, who entered the department in 1862, were already in 1869 drawing Rs. 1,000 a-month as Inspectors; in other words, doing the same work as himself for double the pay, after serving only half the time. There was nothing against him but his ill-luck, for year by year he had been specially thanked by the Government for his zealous and able services, and no aspersion had ever been cast either on his public or his private character. His hard case serves to illustrate the unequal chances of preferment in an important branch of the public service. Not only is promotion guided by uncertain rules, made still more variable by personal caprice, but an outsider from the covenanted services may at any time be brought in over the heads of officers who have borne the burden and heat of the day. Hardest of all perhaps is the unequal wage offered in different provinces for the same service. In Bengal, the North-West Provinces, and Bombay there is a "grading" system of payment, which secures to each Principal, Inspector, and Professor an increase of Rs. 250 a-month—not Rs. 100, as we said in a former article—at the end of every five years. Such a boon seemed specially needful in a service where promotion is comparatively slow. In some provinces however no such system has yet been ordained—notably in the Central Provinces and Oudh. Hence we have the curious spectacle of one Inspector toiling hopelessly on his Rs. 500 a-month in performance of the very same duties for which a far younger rival may be drawing Rs. 750 or Rs. 1,000 a-month! Why this unseemly difference? Has the worse-paid Inspector less work to do than his luckier contemporary? It is true that the Central Provinces cannot yet boast of colleges like those of Bengal and the North-West; but the care of schools of all classes, from the high school to the village school, demands from the one officer labour just as severe and intelligent as from the other. Indeed, the bitterness of the contrast between them is often enhanced by the heavier drudgery falling on the worse paid; for whereas an Inspector in the North-West is allowed to examine a dozen schools at a time, collected for that purpose into one place, the same officer in the Central Provinces must travel long distances through a thinly-peopled country, in order to visit and examine each school by itself. Here surely is a grievance which Lord Mayo's Government might easily redress at a very small cost to the Indian Treasury.

THE COST OF RECRUITS FOR INDIA.

The answers which Mr. Grant Duff gave to Colonel Sykes's queries touching the cost of recruits for the Indian Army, must have caused some of our readers to open their eyes very wide indeed. It was not of course to be expected that recruits obtained from the War Office would cost as little as those who came from Warley in the days of the wicked old East India Company. India must pay for the privilege of being governed directly from the Crown, and the new class of recruits were supposed at any rate to have gone through a certain amount of home training, which insured their reaching India at a better age and in a higher state of fitness for immediate service. But it would be very hard—and Mr. Grant Duff did not make the attempt—to convince most people that a recruit of 1865 or 1866 was worth anything like £205 to the Indian Treasury, if ten years earlier the same man sent out from Warley cost no more than £26. 7s. 5d. It is not even clear that the supposed advantage of riper age and longer drilling has made any appreciable difference either in the healthiness or the effective discipline of the regiments now serving in India. The young men seem to die off as fast as ever, and the records of courts-martial for the last two years appear to argue a degree of indiscipline unknown among the British troops of the East India Company. But then these latter lived in evil days, when two-storied barracks were still undreamed of, and the soldier who took his shilling for Indian service had small hope of ever returning to his own country.

Strange though it may sound however, it is no fiction, but hard truth, that in the seven years from 1850 to 1856 the average cost of a recruit sent out from the Warley depot was £26. 7s. 5d., that on the ten years ending in 1859 the average fell to £19. 14s. 10½d., while from 1861 to 1867 the average rose to £205. These figures are taken from the first Report of Mr. Seccombe's Committee, appointed in 1869 to readjust the charges for effective services of regiments on the East Indian Establishment. They exclude the cost of clothing, arms, and accoutrements, but include the expense of sappers studying at Chatham. The cheapest period—1857-9—coincides with the first despatch of cavalry to India and with a very large increase in the number of recruits supplied. According to the same Report the average cost of each recruit from 1861 to 1867 amounted to £205. In the second of these years it actually rose to £376, but that was chiefly owing to the maintenance of the depots at full strength at a time when fewer recruits were needed in India. In the three years when most recruits were sent out, the average cost of each fell to £134, £126, and £129 respectively. In three other years the average exceeded £220. No wonder that the Committee are unanimous in holding that such charges are "susceptible of a very great reduction." In their second Report of November, 1869, they again point out the possibility of effecting a very large reduction in these charges, without any sacrifice of efficiency.

One reason for this enormous growth in the recruiting charges has evidently been the excessive growth of the depot staff under the War Office as compared with the small number of commissioned and non-commissioned officers that satisfied the wants of the East India Company. Another fruitful source of expense lies in the longer training required by the War Office for Indian recruits. A period of ten months for each cavalry and of seven for each infantry recruit is certainly far too long for Indian requirements, and so say Mr. Seccombe and General Jameson, who represent the Indian side of the Committee. These gentlemen also in a third Report, besides protesting against the long periods of training as "enormously in excess" of what is needed, very properly condemn the War Office scale of depot staffs as "excessive," and the whole Committee declare that "for the purpose of raising and training the number of recruits required for battalions of infantry in India, it is not necesssary to maintain more than one company with the depot in this country," instead of the two proposed by the War Office.

That India ought not in effect to pay the whole cost of maintaining bodies of recruits, whose presence in England adds materially to the strength of our home defences in time of need, is another point on which the Indian members of the Committee lay rightful stress. The War Office does indeed profess to bear its part in meeting the expenses of the General, Medical, and Commissariat Staff; but it hands over the giant's share of the burden to the Indian Government, while taking cheap credit for its own generosity in not making that share a trifle heavier. It even proposes to make India pay a proportion of the staff charges for each battalion to which a depot company may henceforth be attached, and the War Office members of the Committee are quite ready to endorse the proposal in respect of charges which would in no way be affected by the presence or the absence of the depot companies or troops. Apart from these charges, the future average cost of each cavalry recruit is reckoned by the Committee at £136. 13s. 11d., and that of each infantry recruit at £63. 8s. 5d. If these other charges are to be included, the respective averages will rise to £144. 9s. 5d. and £66. 19s.

It is evident even from these reduced estimates that Colonel Sykes has reason to challenge a still greater reduction in the interests of the Indian taxpayer. In common fairness, at least a third should be struck off from the Indian side of the account. Half-a-million a-year, besides the heavy costs of the present transport service, is a great deal too much to pay for the landing in India of several thousand recruits who, in the words of a Deputy Inspector-General writing to the Times, "either die like flies or get invalided after a year or so." The heavy expense involved in this steady drain of human life will be enormously enhanced if Mr. Cardwell's scheme of short enlistments be applied without reserve to the Indian Army. That army already contains a very large proportion—as much as one-fourth—of boys under twenty. If three years' men are henceforth to go out to India, as a writer in the Lancet assumes, "our regular army will be mainly composed of battalions of young soldiers." It is more probable however that six years is the term proposed for Indian service; yet even so, under the present system of enlisting boys of seventeen and eighteen, the sickness and mortality in the Indian army will be greatly increased, as well as the consequent drain upon the Indian Exchequer. Much of this would at any rate be avoided by a return to the old system of a separate army for India, composed of men not younger than twenty, enlisted, let us say, for eight or ten years. There is really no argument against a local army except the fallacy once countenanced by the Horse Guards for its own purposes, that such an army might prove disloyal, because the young soldiers of a newly-raised regiment once resented in a mutinous fashion their arbitrary transfer from the Company's service to the Crown.

RUSSIAN INVASION OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—I am one of those, and the number is not small, who continue to believe that Russia, notwithstanding all her declaratory professions of peace and goodwill, consorting but ill with the steady advance of her cohorts into Central Asia, is pursuing an undeviating, persevering course, that must, if successful, place her, sooner or later, in such close proximity with British India as shall enable her to bear her arms to the very frontier whenever she may stretch forth her hand to do so. From the days when Peter the Great organised the unfortunate expedition of Prince Bekevich Tcherkaski, who was murdered in Knivaurth with all his followers, to the day when Russia seized on the ancient capital of Baber, the forward movement has been gradual, stealthy, but finally sure. She has met with mishaps, she has lost an entire army, but she has never halted, never wavered, and will, in my opinion, never halt until she thinks she sees her opportunity for finally unmasking her policy, and making that "effort supreme," of which we have recently read so much in connection with the siege of Paris. She may fail, and I hope and pray she will, but her premonitory efforts will not be the less persistent, and we may, some three or four or more years hence, hear of her turning the flanks of the Atalik Ghazee of Yarkund, of whom we have recently heard so much, by the north, while her legions will gradually creep up the Valley of Budukhshan from Samarkand, to the head waters of the Oxus. Let any one who will take the trouble to consult the map of Central Asia, then, ask what is to prevent their pouring, with any amount of artillery, over the very practicable mountain passes that divide the source of the Oxus from that of the river of Chetral, or Kamell, and marching down the valley of that name?

This valley presents peculiar facilities for such a march, and an army moving down from the north will find itself landed in the fine open valley of Jellalabad, within a bow-shot, comparatively speaking, of the Khaiber defile! And this while another army might be marching westward from the same point d'appui, or base of operations, at Samarkand, by Maimana to Herat, through a comparatively open line of country. It will not suffice to say "it can't be done." Marches, attended with far more formidable difficulties than these, have been accomplished, and the Budukhshan line would turn the Hindoo Koosh passes by a simple coup de main, and leave Cabul and its intricate eastern passes far in the rear.

But to my especial object in now addressing you, the above being only par parenthese. Entertaining the views I do, it is natural I should seek to strengthen my opinion in all directions. I have already written much elsewhere, and read more on this all-absorbing subject; but was not a little surprised at finding, in the course of my researches, a document of singular curiosity, bearing most directly on the question at issue, being no less than a ground plan of operations for invading India, concerted between the Emperor Napoleon, then First Consul, and Paul, the then Czar of Russia. It is possible it may be known to some of your readers; but not having myself before seen or even heard of it, it is more than probable that the great majority of the public are also ignorant of its existence, and may, therefore, like to know how far these two rulers, severally bent on humiliating England, though from different points of view, had proceeded in their scheme for effecting their cherished object. The document was published as a supplement, at the end of a new edition of a Memoir of Leibnitz to Louis XIV., on the conquest of Egypt, with notes and a preface by Mons. de Hoffmanns, and bears all the marks of authenticity. It is quite true that, seen by the light of our day, this particular plan appears simply impracticable, but that does not divest it of its interest as a highly important link in that chain of evidence we possess of that unswerving determination of the Russian Government to march its armies, under the flimsy guise of extending its commercial enterprise, inch by inch, step by step, so far eastward and southward as to bring them within arm's length of those Indian possessions of England on which her eyes have so long and so intently been gazing with full belief that they will some day become her own by right of conquest. Russia never stayed her hand until she had accomplished the complete subjugation of the Caucasus, and she will move on with equal but more wary determination till she thinks she has British India within her iron grasp. Let those who babble about Russian good faith in her reiterated declarations of peace and goodwill towards England as connected with her advance towards Central Asia, professing her anxious and sole desire to promote the civilisation of its inhabitants, remember her political audacity, when she thought she might discard her mask with impunity in regard to the hateful provisions of the Paris Treaty imposed on her in 1856. She is the very personification of the Jesuits who declare all means lawful that place any desired end within their power. She will continue to profess, to equivocate, and to lie, if necessary, until the time come, and then—

But to my text:—

PROPOSAL FOR A LAND EXPEDITION TO INDIA.

Object of Expedition.

To expel, without possibility of their returning, the English from Hindostan, and so deliver those beautiful and rich provinces from the British yoke; to open out new industrial and commercial channels to the civilised nations of Europe, and to France especially; such is the object of an expedition worthy of immortalising the first year of the nineteenth century, and the heads of the Governments who have planned this useful and glorious enterprise.

Powers that are to Co-operate.

The French Republic and the Emperor of Russia to march to the confines of India a combined army of 70,000 men.

The Emperor of Germany to facilitate the march of the French troops, and to furnish the means of their descending the Danube to its mouth in the Black Sea.

Assembly at Astrakhan of a Russian Army of 35,000 Men, and its Transport to Astrabad.

As soon as the plan of the expedition shall be finally settled, Paul I. will issue orders for the assembly, at Astrakhan, of an army of 35,000, of whom 25,000 are to be regular troops of all arms, and 10,000 Cossacks.

This corps will embark at once on the Caspian Sea, and proceed to Astrabad, there to await the arrival of the French troops.

Astrabad to be the head-quarters of the combined armies; all military stores and provisions shall be collected there, and it will become the centre of communication between India, France, and Russia.

Route to be followed by the French Army from the Banks of the Danube to the Frontier of India.

A corps of 35,000 men of all arms will be detached from the Army of the Rhine.

These troops will be embarked in boats on the Danube, and will descend this river to its mouth in the Black Sea.

Once in the Euxine these troops will embark on transports to be furnished by Russia, and will proceed across the Black Sea, and along the Sea of Azof to Taganrog.

On landing it will march up the right bank of the Don to a Cossack town of the name of Piati Isbianka.

On reaching this place the army will cross the Don, and march to a town named Tzaritzin, on the right bank of the Volga.

It will then embark on this river and descend to Astrakan.

There the troops will embark on merchant vessels, and will proceed, along the whole length of the Caspian Sea, to Astrabad, a maritime town in Persia.

At this spot the French will join the Russian forces, and the combined armies will commence their march, passing by Herat, Furrah, and Kandahar, soon to reach the right bank of the Indus.

Duration of the Progress of the French Army.

To descend the Danube to its mouth in the Black Sea	...	20 days.
From the mouth of the Danube to Taganrog	...	16 „
From Taganrog to Piati Isbianka	...	20 „
From Piati Isbianka to Tzaritzin	...	4 „
From Tzaritzin to Astrakan	...	5 „
From Astrakan to Astrabad	...	10 „
From Astrabad to the banks of the Indus ...	...	45 „
Total	...	120 days.

Thus the French army would, in four months, pass from the banks of the Danube to those of the Indus, but to leave nothing unprovided for five months will be allowed. If, therefore, the army commences its march on the 1st of May, 1801 (O.S.) it ought to expect to reach its destination about the end of September.

It is to be noted that half the march will be by water, and the other half by land.

Means of Execution.

On embarkation the French army will take with it its field artillery and ammunition waggons.

It will require no camp equipage of any kind.

The cavalry, the light troops, and the artillery will not take their horses, but carry with them their saddles, harness, traces, bridles, &c.

It will be provided with biscuit for one month.

Commissaries will precede the army to prepare and distribute rations wherever it may be considered necessary.

On reaching the mouth of the Danube, the army will embark on transport vessels that will be provided by Russia, and supplied with from fifteen to twenty days' provisions.

During the embarkation commissaries and officers of the headquarters will proceed, by land and by post, some to Taganrog, and others to Tzaritzin and Astrakhan.

The commissaries sent to Taganrog will co-operate with Russian commissaries to adjust the marches of the army by land from Taganrog to Piati Isbianka, to prepare rations and quarters, and to collect all the horses and conveyances requisite for the progress of the artillery and baggage of the army.

These same commissaries will arrange with those detailed to Tzaritzin to collect the number of boats required for the passage of the Don, which at this point is somewhat broader than the Seine at Paris.

The commissaries posted at Tzaritzin will prepare beforehand—

1st. At three or four places between the Don and the Volga all the camp equipage and provisions required by the army on its march.

2nd. To collect, below Tzaritzin, all the boats that may be required to embark the French Army on the Volga and convey it to Astrakhan.

The commissaries despatched to Astrakhan will hold in readiness the ships required by the army, and prepare provisions for fifteen days.

When the French Army lands at Astrabad, it will find the following items collected beforehand by the commissaries of both armies.

1st. War material of every description, with heavy artillery.

These will be drawn from the arsenals of Astrakhan, Casan, and Savat, of which they possess an ample supply.

2nd. Draft horses for the transport of the artillery and the war material of the combined armies.

3rd. Conveyances and horses for the transport of baggage, provisions, &c.

4th. Saddle horses for the use of the French cavalry and of the light troops.

These horses can be bought between the Don and the Volga from the Cossacks and the Kalmucks. They are to be found in great numbers, and are the best suited for use in the countries that are to be the theatre of military operations, while the cost will be less than anywhere else.

5th. All the necessaries for camp equipage required by the French army during its march to the banks of the Indus and beyond.

6th. Supplies of cloth, clothing, hats, helmets, gloves, stockings, boots, shoes, &c.

All these supplies are abundant in Russia, and cheaper than in any other part of Europe. The French Government can arrange for their purchase with the directors of the colony of Sarepta, six leagues from Tzaritzin, on the right bank of the Volga. This Evangelical (? Protestant) colony, reported to be very rich, most industrious, and most punctual in keeping its engagements, has its headquarters in Saxony. It is there that instructions to the colony of Sarepta for the supply of everything required must be obtained.

7th. A store furnished with all the pharmaceutical objects likely to be required.

The colony of Sarepta can furnish these from its existing supplies of long standing, well-known for the variety and excellence of their medicaments, rivalling the Imperial stores at Moscow.

8th. Stores of rice, peas, flour, grots, salt, meat, butter, wine, brandy, &c.

9th. Herds of beeves and flocks of sheep.

Peas, flour, grots, salt meat, and butter will have been brought from Russia. Everything else is abundant in Persia.

10th. Stores of forage, oats, and barley.

The oats can be obtained at Astrakhan; barley and forage on the spot.

A carefully drawn up sketch of Russian advance into Central Asia, placed side by side with their periodical declarations that they had not the most remote idea of aggrandisement, would form a curious, instructive, and significant contrast.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

FOUR HUNDRED A-YEAR IN INDIA.

The Delhi Gazette discusses the question of the value of £400 per annum in India. To begin with, as compared with Europe the value of the income must be reduced to one-half, £200. Perhaps not quite so low a figure if the recipient is located in some parts of the N. W. and East. To a lower figure if spent in the more expensive districts of the Western presidency. And so, when our fortunate Engineer rises to the salary of £1,000 per annum he may be regarded when compared with the value of money in Europe as in the receipt of £700. We do not again halve the amount, as the value of an income increases in India the higher it becomes to a greater ratio than in other countries. In India there are some things which to secure health and a certain degree of comfort an Englishman must have. These are means of conveyance, a certain number of servants, provision against the varying climatic characteristics injurious to health. Having economically obtained these on a small income, expenditure is not ex necessitate increased with the rise of the former. In England, excepting food, lodging, and clothing, there are no essentially necessary items of expense. Therefore the value of a smaller income is proportionally less in India than in England, the two assimilating as they rise in amount. If a man is content to live as a bachelor, does not care about "roughing it," and has no expensive habits, we say, enter the Indian Engineering service if nothing turns up better at home. If a man intends marrying, likes his "little comforts" around him, and possesses no private means, we would say, "Don't!"

LOCAL COMMANDERS-IN-CHIEF.

The Madras Times holds that the days have gone by when Commanders-in-Chief at the minor Presidencies were deemed necessities to our military existence in the empire, and it is now very generally acknowledged that their offices are practically useless, though excessively expensive. The Government of India appears to incline to this opinion, if we may judge from its recent proposal to abolish the appointments of Adjutant General at Madras and Bombay. Indeed, the one abolition will speedily lead to the other, unless we are much mistaken. As far as we can understand the matter, it seems that the only argument which can be brought forward in favour of the retention of these appointments is the enormous amount of labour their abolition would throw on the hands of the Commander-in-Chief in India. Doubtless, as our military organisation is at present, the argument carries weight with it, but if we suppose that with the abolition spoken of, the troops in Southern and Western India would be concentrated in a few powerful brigades, or divisions with an effective staff attached to each general officer, we really cannot perceive that much more work would be thrown upon the Commander in-Chief in India than at present, the constant references to his authority at this moment being duly taken into consideration. As far as the Madras presidency is concerned, there would appear to be neither difficulty nor danger in concentrating the great portion of the army of Southern India in two stations —Bangalore and Hyderabad. We have direct communication by rail with Trichinopoly and Bellary, and the troops now quartered in those garrisons might, for any good reason that we know to the contrary, be advantageously stationed at Bangalore, a police force taking their place on removal. The troops at the French Rocks, and Mangalore, might be similarly dealt with, thus causing Bangalore to become the head quarters of a corps d'armee capable of movement by rail to those portions of the Presidency wherein we now maintain weak and scattered garrisons. Hyderabad might absorb our troops in the Northern Division and at Kamptee, the latter station being transferred to the Bombay presidency, in which case we should in some sort realise Sir Charles Napier's grand strategical idea, of a few corps d'armee quartered in suitable positions, and prepared to take the field at short notice. Madras and Cannanore are the remaining garrisons in which it seems advisable to retain detachments. They might continue as they are, being relieved annually, however, from Bangalore, in order to afford all our troops the opportunity of instruction in a great camp of exercise, together with a change of climate. The cost of such relief might be considered balanced by the better health of the European portion of our forces. With regard to the military demands made upon this Presidency by Burmah, the Straits, and Hong Kong, the necessary regiments for this foreign service might be detailed from Bangalore as the head-quarters of the Army of Southern India, the troops at Hyderabad being relieved periodically as heretofore, but invariably from Bangalore—as the Aldershott of the South. Under the proposed arrangement, all our troops would become accustomed to act together, while the discipline of the native portion of the army, we venture to think, would be much improved by a concentration which could not afford it an opportunity of fomenting grievances and mutinous ideas in out-of-the way single stations. The country would save a very considerable sum by the change. We should have but two divisional commands in this Presidency, instead of many, and no commander-in-chief, with his staff to pay for. The staff appointments of Bengal and Bombay would be open to Madras officers as well as to others, and we apprehend that deserving men would reap their rewards, since no favouritism could condone the error of placing inefficient officers in commands so important and responsible as those we have just sketched lightly.

INSIDE THE ZENANA.

The Indian Mirror observes that wise men have seen a slight improvement of late even in the Zenana. We are not inclined to believe that they are wrong. We do not think the institution of wife-beating has ever been so prevalent in this country as among manlier races and more favoured climes; but still we do remember the time when considerate young husbands delighted to pinch their better-halves black and blue for the grave offence of peeping over the parapet, or thrusting their nose and nose-ring through the open venetian. We have heard of youthful Baboos with a sentimental turn grieve over the fact that, for the life of them, they could not form any idea as to what their wives' faces were like. They were never allowed to have a glimpse of the dear ones, and never admitted into their society before twelve o'clock in the night; and at that advanced hour of the night it was not possible to catch a glimpse, because the dear ones always put out the lamp before their liege lords entered the room, being taught to be too modest to expose their features to the latter. We have seen substantial palkees, muffled from stem to stern, with a double cover, escorted in front and rear by bulky turbanned bearers, sweating and out of breath through enforced locomotion along the conveyance. Mothers-in-law thrashed their daughters-in-law, and sisters-in-law bullied their brothers' brides, and wives over-worked and underfed, and the husbands, helpless to stay or remedy the evils, rushing out to deliver thundering lectures on Female Improvement. Beef and books were equally forbidden within the sacred precincts of the Zenana, which in many a family was anything but a paradise. But is not all this much changed at the present time? Look at this picture and at that. The rules are not only relaxed in favour of old ladies who are fit to go on pilgrimage, but in the case of young ladies too. Nay, the order of precedence is reversed. The youthful wife of Bengal is not only padlocked, but she is visible to her husband at any hour of the day and night, which every English wife "of the period," what with her purchases and what with her balls, is not. If anybody in the house quarrels with Bohooma, the Baboo quarrels with that person, and threatens to reduce the allowances of the whole family. Bohooma is every day imbibing the spirit of English civilisation through the pomatum-pot and the powder-puff, or in an occasional ounce of port wine. She eats the choice delicacies of the season, iced creams and mango-fish, which the husband brings as he comes home from office. The sister-in-law sighs, gloats, and pines in impotent malice. Talk of jewellery! Each of the young lady's ears is bored, at least, at eight different places, and through each of these openings hangs a jewel, European, Mahometan, or Hindoo in origin; and there are jewels about her nose (which is now a days being bored right through), and then there are jewels on her neck and arms and feet which tinkle against each other, (not of course the limbs, but the jewels), and thus every movement of the enchanting creature is music. She reads and writes, knits and embroiders, composes prose and poetry, talks Hindoostanee to the bearer, and seasons her vernacular with many an English word and phrase. She freely walks on the terrace, scolds the servants, criticises the curries, rejects the clothes, and pooh-poohs the household god. She manages all the expenses of the family, henpecks her husband, and browbeats her mother-in-law. This venerable lady, who is a time-server, is content to sneak and flatter and take her rule from the rising genius of the zenana. The young man is taken completely in hand, lectured in and out of curtain, his will completely mastered, and he is set off and on with the greatest facility. If he is a fool, he displays his condition in open acts of servile slavery; if there is a grain of sense left in him, he is a slave equally, but pretends outwardly to keep up a semblance of freedom and impartiality. The zenana, in many an instance, if not exactly a paradise, is neither a prison, nor anything like it.

THE BOMBAY FEAST TAX.

The Englishman, on first reading the draft of an Act for a tax on Feasts in Bombay, inclined to look upon it as the joke of some feeble wit, until it read the debate in Council, in the course of which Sir Seymour Fitzgerald referred to and defended it. It is still in doubt whether it is not intended by its authors rather as a piece of legislative satire on the extremity to which the Supreme Government has reduced the local administration by the Financial Resolution of the 14th December last, than as a sober and deliberate expression of the financial and political wisdom of Bombay. The Bill is one to impose a duty on Feasts in the Bombay Presidency; and it proposes to levy a tax of ten rupees for every hundred guests at all entertainments for eating or drinking, whether secular or religious, to which more than a hundred persons are invited. The statement of objects and reasons throws but little light on the motive for introducing this novel form of taxation. It appears, however, to be expected that it will yield a large addition to the local revenue; that it will fall only on the wealthy, and only at times when it will be little felt. Unless, however, the habits and customs of the Bombay Presidency are very different to those of any part of India with which we are acquainted, we have no hesitation in expressing a very decided opinion that these expectations will all be falsified by the event. So far from the tax falling only on the wealthy, it strikes us that the large majority of entertainments to which more than a hundred guests are invited are caste feasts, given by the middle and lower orders, at which the expenditure is on so small a scale that the proposed tax would on the average probably be one of not less than fifty per cent. on the cost of the entertainment. To these entertainments the tax would probably put an end, and the remnant of more sumptuous feasts would be comparatively small: In this case the measure would be, even in a financial sense, a failure. This is, however, the least objection to which it is obnoxious. On both moral and social grounds we do not hesitate to pronounce the proposition to be as odious as on economical grounds it is absurd. In the first place, the duty is a tax upon hospitality; and as such its tendency must be to narrow the sphere of men's social sympathies. Cynics may argue that the motive which leads men to entertain their neighbours is generally a selfish one; and that hospitality is therefore a form of self-indulgence which may be taxed as legitimately as any luxury. The same argument, however, strikes at the root of every virtue. Then, again, the duty must in practice involve an intolerable amount of espionage and interference with the private concerns of citizens. Indeed, it is in itself an impertinence and an intrusion. If the tax is to be enforced, it will be essential that the police or some other representatives of the law should have the power of entering houses where feasts are going on, and counting the guests. We could imagine nothing more irritating, or more likely to provoke resistance. It has been urged in defence of the measure that it is a sumptuary law; but students of modern political economy will find in this fact one of the strongest arguments against it. We can hardly believe that it will ever receive legislative sanction; but, if it should become law, all who care to evade it will, we imagine, find ready means of doing so.

THE VICEROY'S TOUR.

The Viceroy arrived at Dehri at eight o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, the 5th April, driving in a dog-cart with Colonel Rundall, to the great astonishment of the people, who seemed to have expected him to arrive in full state. Immediately after his arrival, his Excellency, accompanied by Colonels Rundall and Haig, and Messrs. Levinge and Lang, proceeded along the tramway to the Soane Works, and carefully inspected the anicut and other works in progress, after which a visit was paid to the Dhodand quarry. His Excellency is said to have expressed his satisfaction with the progress of the works.

His Excellency, accompanied by Colonel Rundall, R.E., and personal staff, arrived in Allahabad on Thursday (April 6). He was met at the station by the Lieutenant-Governor and a number of civil and military officers, and even some few ladies. A body of the East Indian Railway Rifle Volunteers, about seventy strong, was drawn up on the platform, under Captain C. B. Lemesurier, their local commandant, Lieutenant Kertland, and Ensigns Spence and Neville. A guard of honour of the Allahabad Rifles, with their band, under the command of Captain Dodd, received the Viceregal party on arrival at Government House.

The Foreign, Military, and Home Secretaries, several of the Under-Secretaries, one or two of the Members of Council, the Viceroy's Military Secretary, the Maharajah of Bulrampore, and a number of native noblemen had arrived at Lucknow in anticipation of the Viceroy's visit. But the entire programme has, of course, been quite upset by the sad illness which has befallen the Chief Commissioner.

The Viceroy reached Lucknow at half-past five on the morning of April 12. He was met at the railway station by the authorities, but all guards and salutes were under the circumstances dispensed with. We are glad to learn that up to the same evening General Barrow was progressing favourably. Lord Mayo left Lucknow about four P.M. that day for Sectapore. From the favourable progress being made towards recovery by the Chief Commissioner, it is hoped by some, says the Pioneer, that on the Viceroy's return from Sectapore, Lucknow will be able to have its holiday and merry-making after all. It is beyond doubt that General Barrow's health will demand eventually, however, a visit to England, when Sir George Couper, Bart., Judicial Commissioner, will, it is presumed, officiate.

LORD MAYO'S SPEECH ON FINANCE.

We make room for the following passages from Lord Mayo's speech at the last reading of the Income Tax Bill on March 31:—I admit the comparative poverty of this country, as compared with many other countries of the same magnitude and importance, and I am convinced of the impolicy and injustice of imposing burdens upon this people which may be called either crushing or oppressive. Mr. Grant Duff, in an able speech which he delivered the other day in the House of Commons, the report of which arrived by last mail, stated with truth that the position of our finance was wholly different from that of England. "In England," he stated, "you have a comparatively wealthy population. The income of the United Kingdom has, I believe, been guessed at 800 millions per annum. The income of British India has been guessed at 300 millions per annum. That gives well on to £30 per annum as the income of every person in the United Kingdom, and only £2 per annum as the income of every person in British India."

I believe that Mr. Grant Duff had good grounds for the statement he made, and I wish to say, with reference to it, that we are perfectly cognisant of the relative poverty of this country as compared with European States.

But as a matter of fact, are the people of India heavily taxed? Figures are not always satisfactory, and calculations of this kind must be, to some extent, open to cavil; but still as statisticians accept the facts that I shall state, we may consider that they represent pretty fairly approximate accuracy.

I have made from reliable documents a comparative statement of the incidence of Imperial taxation in India, and in some European States, England excluded. I have deducted from the resources of the Indian Empire all those sources of revenue which cannot strictly be called taxation. I have deducted land revenue for the reason that it is not taxation, but is that share of the profits of the land which the Government, in its character of chief proprietor, has from time immemorial deemed its right to demand. The opium revenue is excluded, because no one in India pays it. I have also deducted contributions from native States, the receipts received in the Army, Postal, Telegraph, and all the Spending Departments. The result is, that the revenue received from taxation proper in India amounts to 14¼ millions from a population of 150 millions, which gives a result of 1s. 10d. per head per year. I have followed the same investigation with regard to five European States, some of which are not the richest, and I find that while Indian taxation is but 1s. 10d. per head per year, the subjects of the Sultan are paying 7s. 9d.; those of the Emperor of Russia 12s. 2d.; the inhabitants of Spain 18s. 5d.; Austria 19s. 7d.; and Italy 17s. It must be remembered, however, that a shilling bears a larger proportion to the income of a labourer in India than to that of a labourer in any of the countries mentioned; but still there is no such difference between the value of labour here and in Europe as is represented by the difference of taxation that I have described. Notwithstanding, the financial credit of our Empire is far better than that of any of those States to which I have referred. I have mentioned these facts to show that the term "crushing taxation" is wholly inapplicable to the countries subject to the authority of the Government of India. At the same time I am far from saying that this happy state is not right. I believe it is. The greatest security to Government is given by the feeling entertained by the people that they are lightly taxed. And by avoiding as much as possible additions to the burdens of those who contribute to the interest of the State, we add much to the safety of our rule.

. . . . When gentlemen accuse the Government of extraordinary inaccuracy in estimating, they forgot this, that an estimate is a matter of opinion, and is, to a great extent, a prophecy. My hon. friend Sir Richard Temple described with great force in his financial statement the difficulties that are to be met in this respect. The Indian estimates are an aggregate of facts, collected over an immense area by a large body of officers. These facts are carefully adjusted, compared with the estimates of former years, analysed and summed up; and from this mass of evidence deductions are drawn. Owing to the peculiarity of some of these chief items of revenue—items which hardly exist or are totally unknown in many countries—the difficulty is vastly increased. It is not possible to avoid error. The most sagacious man cannot foretell the price of opium for a month, far less for a year, and opium produces nearly one-sixth of our revenue. The land revenue (which gives two fifths of the revenue) is also subject to risks which no man can foresee. The traffic receipts of the railways fluctuate considerably, and depend to a great extent on the general prosperity of the country. The customs revenue fluctuates also to a great extent according to the condition of the people.

We have been advised to meet the difficulty by what is called "sanguine estimating." I think it is quite right in estimating to leave such a margin as will, in our opinion, secure our calculations from some of the disturbing causes which I have mentioned; but sanguine estimating, which informs the country beyond or within the facts that are in our possession, for the object of diminishing or increasing taxation, is, in my opinion, nothing less than dishonesty. I am sure my hon. friend Mr. Robinson would be the last man to recommend anything like dishonesty; but what he appears to suggest is that we should disregard the facts which were laid before the Government and come to a different conclusion from that which we thought these facts would warrant. I cannot help thinking that if we had taken that course we should not have been acting in accordance with the principles which ought to guide us in all our transactions. We think we know a good deal about finance, but certainly we do not know anything about "financing," and it is our duty to present the public with the most accurate results we can obtain, and the soundest opinion we can form. We never can, and never will, take any other course.

But with regard to this accuracy of estimate, the Secretary of the Financial Department has supplied me with a curious statement, showing the comparison of English and also the Indian estimates with actuals. The English accounts are on the average better than the estimates, whereas, hitherto, the Indian accounts have been on the average worse than the estimate. It is intended to take precautions against a recurrence of this, but it, of course, involves some additional severity in providing ways and means. But the Indian estimates appear to approximate more closely to facts than do the estimates in England. It is curious that if we compare the English estimates for the last ten years with the actuals, we find that the annual average difference of actual from estimate was £2.132,700, on a revenue varying from 70 to 74 millions. In India the annual average difference from estimate was £1,874,600 on a revenue varying from 41 millions to 50 millions, so that we find that, notwithstanding all the difficulties which lie in the way of the Financial member in laying his statement before the public, his estimate does not compare unfavourably as to the accuracy with that made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

It has frequently been stated that a great deal of our misfortune has arisen in that we have given undue liberty to the Public Works Department in the way of expenditure. Let me remind the Council as to what has been done in this respect. It is probable that some useless works have been stopped, but at the same time a great many useful undertakings have been unavoidably postponed. The fact remains that whilst in 1868-69 the expenditure was £6.272.000, and in 1870-71 £4,797,000, for the present year it is £3,802,000; so that the expenditure in the Public Works Department has been reduced nearly one-half in the period named.

But the most serious charge made is, that the public was unnecessarily taxed in 1870-71, that is, in the present year, that there was no necessity to raise the income-tax to the extent it was done, and that the surplus of nearly a million which had been obtained shows that grievous error was committed. If after what has occurred we had been over-careful, and taken our estimates of revenue somewhat low, in order to make security doubly sure, even as "skilful surgeons cut beyond the wound to make the cure complete," we should not have been much to blame. But we did nothing of the kind. The estimates on both sides were as near the known facts as we could put them. As my hon. friend has reminded the Council, the surplus which had been attained this year has arisen from one special cause—namely, opium. We had no right to take it otherwise. We took it at Rs. 975 a chest. There had been a steady fall in price for months; we consulted all the authorities which were available, and I know that my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Bullen Smith) entertained the same gloomy anticipations as we did with regard to price for the remainder of the year. But on this particular occasion, while the estimate was being prepared, we had the advantage of the advice of her Majesty's Minister in China, Sir Rutherford Alcock, a man who had spent his whole life in that country; he gave us, in this very room, at great length, his views as to the course that he thought the opium trade was likely to take. Nothing will tend more to show how unreliable are any forecasts with regard to opium when I state that on this particular occasion we were in possession of better intelligence and what might have been supposed more accurate information than we ever had before.

However, all the great authorities were wrong. The market, soon after our estimate was made, took an unexpected turn; price rose, and the result was, that in the article of opium alone we have received about £900,000 more than we expected. I will not condescend to notice certain unworthy charges which have been made against the Department, such as "cooking accounts," "adjustments made to suit convenience," and "credits taken which did not exist." They are utterly baseless, and reflect no credit on those who made them. Had some of them been uttered against the directors of a respectable company, the probability is that they might have subjected those who made them to those liabilities which the law provides as a protection against libel and defamation.

But I have said enough to show that in reality there was no unnecessary alarm in September 1869, that the accounts of this great empire are as correct as accounts of so complicated a nature can be, that in accuracy our estimates compare advantageously with those of other countries, and that unless we had been prepared to endure another year's deficit, and, I may say, financial disgrace, the measures of March last were absolutely indispensable.

STATION TALK.

SEETAPORE, March 31.—Yesterday Major-General Brooke Taylor held his annual inspection of troops in this station. Arriving here early in the morning he got through the numerous details of the day's programme with a promptitude well suited to the lateness of the season. He began with witnessing the firing of about twenty picked men of the "Buffs" at the butts, and then saw the kits and barrack-rooms of a part of the regiment. The canteen, sergeants' mess, school, and all the remaining regimental institutions were visited in order, and gave extreme satisfaction. From the infantry lines the General passed to the artillery (A-16), among whom much the same routine was observed; and then to the 17th Bengal cavalry. The gallant General brought a thoroughly hard morning's work to a close with an examination of the various regimental books, &c. While with the "Buffs" he took the opportunity of advising the last-joined draft from England to abstain from native liquors and avoid exposure to the sun if they wished their present exemption from sickness; and I am sure that the old gentleman's earnest and kind manner must have carried weight with it. Altogether, the inspection (in barracks) entailed far less trouble than is usually the case; and the affable, good-natured manner of the General placed all at their ease. I believe he is a zealous advocate of Lord Napier in his desire to promote education and intellectual amusements among the soldiers. At five o'clock all the troops paraded on the race-course. The usual "marching past" evolutions being completed, the "Buffs" and native lancers took up a position on one side of the course, and left the ground clear for the manœuvres of the artillery, who, for half an hour afforded great satisfaction by the exactness and rapidity of their movements. While they were returning to barracks the "Buffs" went through the manual and platoon exercises with an amount of precision only equalled by their steadiness while marching past. The blank firing by companies arranged in line was rendered like one man. As the dusk of evening had approached I did not wait for the completion of the field inspection; but have no doubt, judging from the dexterity evinced by the native cavalry at tent-pegging a few weeks ago, that their lance exercise did not escape approbation. I believe that General Taylor was well pleased with every particular of his inspections. The evening saw him on his return journey to Lucknow.

BAREILLY, March 31.—A theatrical performance in the Theatre Royal on Monday and Tuesday next is announced. His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India will pass through Rohilkund this time. On or about the 20th proximo his Lordship will be at Pillibheet. After indulging in some field sports there and in the adjoining jungles, his Excellency will pass on to Allygurh via Bareilly and Budaon. The hot weather has set in quite early.

April 1.—In continuation of my letter of yesterday's date I send you a further and more correct account of the disturbance that took place between the Mahomedans and Hindoos. It was occasioned by the former. There were three thousand of them armed with clubs, while about forty or fifty thousand Hindoos were without any arms celebrating their own religious festival. Five or six have been killed, and about seventy wounded. The Kotwal has not been wounded, but got a blow from a stone. The Mahomedans have been prevented from taking out their tazeeas at all, and anybody caught out of doors in the city this evening after six o'clock will be punished. I have just heard that there has been a serious disturbance at Pillibheet; the police were overpowered, and the Assistant Superintendent had to escape; a company of the 25th and two guns have gone there. There has also been a disturbance at Furreedpore, sixteen miles from here; the police were again overpowered and the Christian Police Inspector surrounded, and, it is said, locked up in the thanna by the mob. Troops have been sent there. From all I hear, the Commissioner has acted with great firmness; his proceedings have restored peace in the city.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

RAJPOOTANA.—Ajmere and Mhairwarra will shortly, it is said, be formed into a Chief Commissionership.

THE WAHABEES.—A special commission will be appointed to try the so-called Wahabee prisoners, Ameer Khan and others, committed to the Patna Sessions for trial in May. Mr. Justice Phear and Mr. Ravenshaw (the Judge who presided at Patna), will, it is said, be appointed as Wahabee Commissioners.

SIR MADHAVA RAO.—We find it stated that Sir Madhava Rao will not much longer continue as Dewan of Travancore. He will resign, it is said, of his own motion; and will be succeeded by his cousin Mr. Raghoonatha Row, a proficient of the Madras University, and one in high favour with the Madras Government.

CACHAR.—A telegram from Cachar announces that a renewal of raids is threatened on the frontier, and that road-making is consequently much impeded. The stockades, however, are nearly finished, and the troops are in good health. General Bourchier was to have started on the 5th for the Sylhet frontier post.

FURLOUGH.—The Pioneer is assured on grave authority, yet can hardly believe, that an order has passed the Council at home, and will come into effect from the first June next, declaring that for the future officers will only be allowed a furlough of one year, retaining their appointments and half staff-pay, instead of the two years allowed at present.

LOCAL CESSES ON LAND.—A numerously attended meeting of Bengal zemindars, held at Calcutta on the 3rd April, adopted the following resolution, and a petition on the subject to be addressed to both Houses of Parliament:—"That, in the deliberate opinion of this meeting, the proposed cess on land in Bengal would be a direct breach of the permanent settlement concluded with the people of Bengal by the Marquis of Cornwallis, and ratified by the Imperial Government and Parliament."

ASSAM.—A correspondent, writing from Gowhatty, says that cattle disease is very prevalent in some parts of Assam. The cause is believed to be the great heat which prevailed during the end of March; at times the thermometer was at ninety-three degrees in the shade. There has been, however, a considerable fall in the temperature since the beginning of this month. The Commissioner is about to begin his inspection tour of Upper Assam, with a portion of his office establishment. This will be Colonel Hopkinson's first visit to Upper Assam since his arrival from England.

A ROYAL CONVICT.—Mirza Secunder Beg, one of the Delhi Royal family residing at Shiwalla Ghat, Benares, was tried on Tuesday (4th) before the Sessions Judge on the charge of buying slave girls, and sentenced to four years' simple imprisonment and a fine of five hundred rupees. His pleader appealed by telegraph to the High Court to suspend execution of the sentence; but no order from the High Court to that effect arriving within the five hours allowed by the Lower Court for the purpose of such communication, Mirza Secunder Beg, despite his Imperial ancestry, was conducted to the common jail.

ILLNESS OF GENERAL BARROW.—In regard to the illness of General Barrow, Chief Commissioner of Oudh, the Englishman gives us the following details:—"He was attacked by a fit of apoplexy on Friday night, the 7th April. Paralysis of the left side supervened, and for some time the General was in an unconscious state. By Saturday night he had considerably improved, and could articulate and understand what was said to him; but an attack of this nature must always be a cause of much anxiety, especially when the sufferer has been so many years in this country as General Barrow. The news of the unfortunate attack was telegraphed to the Viceroy at Cawnpore, and his Excellency was to have halted there till Tuesday, proceeding on that day to Seetapore, and returning thence to Lucknow, should the health of the Chief Commissioner be sufficiently re-established."

OFFICIAL SQUABBLES.—It is utterly impossible to form an opinion as to the right and wrong of the squabble which is said to have taken place in the Select Committee on the income-tax between Mr. Stephen and Mr. Bullen Smith. The Daily Examiner gives an account which clearly proves that something of an unpleasant nature took place, but what it was exactly we do not know, and we have heard the matter put in a very different light from the Examiner's. All that is certain is that Mr. Stephen and Mr. Bullen Smith did clash terribly; that the latter threatened to resign and that the former "explained," or "apologised"—we know not which is the proper word. Mr. Stephen seems to have been in hot water all through the debate, but we have heard on good authority that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal looks on the passage of arms between himself and Mr. Stephen simply as fair discussion.—Friend of India

COTTON MILLS.—It is an extraordinary fact that all the cotton mills India can boast are on the Bombay side, and the enterprising people there seem to think they have not a sufficient number yet. Only a short time ago the proposed formation of an additional one was announced, and latest advices mention a second, with a capital of eight lacs. We had one in this part of the country not long ago, but it has gone the way of all other joint-stockeries started about the same period—it has gone into liquidation. It is not to be inferred, therefore, that cotton-mills in India will not pay. We are confident they would. There are difficulties in the way of establishing them and keeping them going through the period of infancy, but those difficulties are not insurmountable. Had the people interested in the late Cawnpore mills had the experience at command when they started upon their enterprise that they had acquired when they were obliged to shut up, results would have been vastly different. They cannot be a selfish body of men, and on the data they have collected we feel confident a company might be launched with every prospect of abundance of success. People do not now-a-days place much, if any, faith in joint-stockeries of any description, but even that difficulty may be overcome by a judicious and honest policy.—Delhi Gazette.

THE MILITARY FINANCE DEPARTMENTS.—In the early part of November last it was reported that the Secretary of State had sanctioned the grading of the Military Finance Departments of the three Presidencies. The Duke had fought long and hard against the scheme, but the representations of the Government of India finally prevailed. It had been demonstrated beyond contradiction that a principle which was found to answer in the Civil Finance Department could not by any means fail if extended to the military branch of the same department. Moreover, it appeared desirable that all officers connected with the finances of the country should be placed upon a common footing. Though, owing to the delays that have necessarily attended the adjustment of details, the grading had not yet been published, it was supposed that from the date of the orders passed by the Duke of Argyll no movements would take place in the Military Finance Department, save under the conditions laid down. It has, therefore, caused some surprise in military circles that the Gazette of the 8th instant promotes several officers of the Madras Pay Department, resulting from a vacancy of a date subsequent to the receipt in India of the Secretary of State's despatch. By this it is argued that an injustice has been done to the departments of Bombay and Bengal.—Englishman, April 12.

NATIVE CONSERVATISM.—If any proof were needed of the tenacity with which the native will adhere to ancient customs and usages, of the obstinacy with which he will cling to the habits and practices of his forefathers, it has been furnished by the Director General of the Post-office of India. We learn from a circular just issued by him, that, notwithstanding the recent concession relating to the weight of letters that may be carried for half an anna, "the Post-office still finds itself compelled to dispose of native letters written upon the most flimsy paper, folded in such a way as to leave barely room for a legible address." Apart from that practice, excusable perhaps at the time that a letter now carried for half an anna cost five, natives "have the almost invariable habit of mixing up together in the address the names of provinces, districts, post towns, and particular localities of such post towns, thus rendering the address still more liable to misconstruction." This obstinate but unnecessary sticking to bap-dadas' habit has led, as a matter of course, to much inconvenience. The Director General of the Post-office of India would apply a remedy. He proposes the issue of "good sized envelopes of substantial paper, with a place prominently marked with a black line for the entry of the name of the post town of address, and embossed with a stamp of the value of six pie, these envelopes being sold at the value of the stamps borne by them, i.e., without any charge for the envelope itself" (the italics are ours). One would fancy that this alone would be sufficient to bring the envelope generally into use, but the Director General proposes an additional incentive. He proposes that while the present scale of postage should in all respects be continued in the case of the envelopes, the minimum postage rate for a prepaid cover not exceeding one tola, other than the embossed envelope, be one anna.—Delhi Gazette.

IMPORTS.—Calcutta, April 12.—The tone of the market during the past week has been exceedingly quiet, and we have therefore nothing of importance to communicate. For Grey Shirtings, 39-inch, the demand has been most limited, and prices continue very unremunerative; the wide widths continue neglected, and prices nominal. Grey Madapollams and T-Cloths continue very inactive. Grey Mulls, 44-inch, still keep very quiet, and prices are a shade weaker; other widths have been in fair request. Bleached Goods have been generally saleable to a fair extent at about rates current last mail. Twist: Grey and Coloured is very quiet.

EXPORTS.—Calcutta, April 12.—Saltpetre: Although but little business has been done during the week, prices have somewhat hardened, owing to the stocks in hand being very small, and importations also. Rice: There has been more activity in the rice market than for some time; prices are therefore firm, with an upward tendency. Linseed has continued in good demand, but without causing an increase in price, as the new crop is coming freely into the market. Rapeseed: The new crop is now being sent forward rapidly to market, and buyers for Great Britain have operated largely, but without causing any rise in the market rates. Raw Silk: Unsatisfactory telegrams from London have almost put a stop to business during the week, though prices have not given way to any extent; but, as the March bund has begun to arrive, a fall may shortly be looked for. Complaints are rife of the native dealers being in the habit of selling inferior silk under well-known marks, and buyers will have to exercise greater caution to satisfy their constituents in England and elsewhere. The prospects of the March bund are still reported favourable. Cotton: No fall has taken place in the prices, owing to the news from Europe and large supplies on hand, but buyers have stood out of the market until a fall occurs.

A BRILLIANT OPENING!

The following advertisement of the Acting Collector appears in the Supplement to the North Arcot District Gazette, April 11:—

WANTED.—A person of respectability for the post of Guardian to the Kallur Minor Poligar—salary, Rs. 15 a-month. None need apply who has not had some experience in the Account and Correspondence Departments. The successful candidate will be required to give security in the sum of Rs. 1,000. Applications to be sent to the address of the undersigned up to the 31st inst., with copies only of testimonials of character and qualifications. Preference will be given to a duly qualified Government Uncovenanted Service pensioner.

In reference to this, a correspondent of the Madras Mail, who signs himself a "Graduate of the Madras University," makes the following inquiries:—

1. What will be the duties required of the "Guardian" to the "Kallur Minor Poligar?" Will he be entrusted with the mental improvement of the young "Poligar," or has he merely to protect his person? Rs. 15 a-month suggests more the idea of a guard than a guardian.

2. What is meant by "a person of respectability?" Has not such a person a chance of losing his respectability by accepting Rs. 15 a month?

3. What are the peculiarities of the "Poligar" species, besides fierceness? Would it not be a risk to venture near a "Poligar" for ten times Rs. 15?

4. Would it not be advisable to lend out the security of Rs. 1,000, which the applicant has to furnish, and let the interest go towards his pay per mensem? Anyone in difficulties (myself for instance) would be glad enough to pay Rs. 15 a month for the loan of Rs. 1,000.

5. As the applicant for the guardianship must have "some experience in the account and correspondence departments," is it to be presumed that the chief part of his duties will be the instruction of the "Poligar" in the housekeeping and letter-writing?

6. Will the applicant be subject to the "25 years order?"

7. What is meant by a "duly-qualified Government uncovenanted service pension?" Is it one who has duly reached the age of fifty-five years in the U.C.S. of Government?

8. Will preference be given to a "B. A." of the Madras University?

9. In case no applications are received by the 31st inst., will any be received after that date, as a reply to these questions may necessitate a delay?

10. Is there any hope of an increase of salary?

11. Are there any perquisites to be expected; and, if so, will it be safe to receive such, since the acting collector is known to be an uncommonly vigilant judicial officer?

12. Is there a hope of a pension after thirty years' service?

Miscellaneous.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—The Superintending Engineer of the 4th Division has lately forwarded an estimate to Government, amounting to 650 rupees, for altering and improving the second line of rails of the tramway between the Custom-house and the Madras Pier.

LEGISLATION.—A telegram has been received by the Madras Government announcing that the Governor-General had given his assent to the Local Funds Act and the Town Improvement Act. These measures are now therefore law. The Act amending the Madras Municipal Act has been sent for the assent of his Excellency.

PENSIONS.—During February the Madras Government proposed to the Government of India the extension to pensioned heirs of native non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the rule by which invalid and wounded pensioners of the grade of non-commissioned officers and privates are not subject to any denomination of pension while employed in the police and other duties. The Governor-General has declined the proposal.

COFFEE IN COORG.—The Bangalore Herald says that owing to the alarm caused by the appearance of cholera in Coorg a portion of the coffee crop still remains to be exported, there being great difficulty in procuring carriage. On some estates, where the coolies have not gone away to their homes, manuring and weeding have begun. The appearance of the coffee estates generally is promising.

SANITARY.—The question as to whether the Sanitary Inspector of Madras should be a Medical man or otherwise was warmly discussed by the Municipal Commissioners at a recent meeting held by them. A small majority decided that it was desirable their Sanitary Inspector should be a medical man, and passed a resolution accordingly. Government, however, in opposition to this resolution have appointed Mr. C. E. Gover, the late master of the Orphan Male Asylum School, to this important post, thus entirely ignoring the Municipal Commissioners in the matter, and who, as far as this appointment is concerned, are made to look exceeding small.—Athenæum.

POLICE.—In obedience to an order of the Government of India, calling for reduction in this Department, we observe that Major Hearn, the Inspector General, has submitted a scheme for the reduction of our Police establishment, "without impairing its efficiency," which will effect a saving of about £42,000 per annum. In the reduction recommended, one Deputy Inspector Generalship is proposed to be abolished; but why the whole four should not be done away with—perfectly useless appointments as they are known to be—we cannot understand, and we hope the Government of India, however much they may be inclined to be satisfied with the other reductions proposed, will not accept the arrangement which contemplates the abolishment of only one of the Deputy Inspector Generalships.—Athenæum.

LORD NAPIER'S DURBAR.—A Durbar was held by his Excellency the Governor at the Banqueting Hall on the evening of April 12, when his Highness Prince Azeem Jah Bahadur was installed as the Prince of Arcot under letters patent from her Majesty the Queen. The Prince is about sixty-nine years of age, and on the death of his elder brother, Nawab of the Carnatic in 1825, he acted as Regent for seventeen years, till in 1842 his nephew was placed on the Musnud. On the death of the latter, in 1855, no successor was appointed to the Musnud, and now again, seventeen years after the last Nabob's death, the Prince, who has urged his claims to the Musnud for years past, has been honoured in lieu with a Royal Patent as Prince of Arcot and a large stipend, and advantages, which the feeble old man is not likely to enjoy for many years. The Durbar was largely attended by all classes of the community, and there was a grand military display, everything having been done to give eclat to the occasion.

THE TINNEVELLY CASE.—The Tinnevelly Public Works Department case, of which we have made mention in several of our previous issues, has come to a close, the result being the conviction of both the accused parties, namely, the sub-engineer and the native contractor. The trial of this case discloses a sad state of affairs as regards the administration of justice in the Mofussil, and will undoubtedly furnish Government with many cogent reasons, in addition to those already urged, for separating the judicial and revenue branches of the civil service. Our readers will hardly believe that high officials in the positions respectively of collector and magistrate of the district and civil and sessions judge could be capable of such glaring irregularities in the discharge of their magisterial and judicial functions as are disclosed in this trial; and we are once more led to the painful conclusion, namely, that out of Madras the administration of justice is a dangerous farce, by which the rights and liberties of the people are too frequently wantonly trifled with and gravely sacrificed. In Madras, with a High Court bench of Judges to look to for protection, we are better off.—Athenæum.

BURMAH.—We have news from Burmah of a serious occurrence which at present threatens to compromise the peaceful relations now existing between the British and Burmese Governments. In the treaty negotiated by General Fytche with the King of Mandalay there is a stipulation to the effect that so long as the two Governments are on a friendly footing, his Majesty is at liberty to import whatever arms he may wish for. By virtue of this agreement the King lately contracted for a supply of rifles, but the British Government refused its permission to import them. His Majesty was very wroth, and at once retaliated by destroying Upper Burman trade. In defiance of the treaty above-mentioned he appointed four royal brokers, who are to purchase all goods imported, and from whom alone Burmese dealers are in future permitted to buy. To these brokers must be sold all produce, and they in their turn will dispose of it to exporters—in fact, the King has made trade a royal monopoly. The result was of course a panic. Consignees refused to take delivery of goods by steamers, landed them under protest, threw up business; deputations waited at the palace to implore his Majesty to undo the mischief, and the Political Agent remonstrated, but the order has not been recalled, and trade at the capital of Upper Burmah has virtually ceased. One question is, with whom lies the blame? Did the British Government break the treaty by refusing to allow the importation of rifles? Was the conduct of the King such as to justify us in calling our relations with him "friendly?" Another question is, what is to be done if the King remains deaf to remonstrance?—Rangoon Paper.

SILK CULTURE.—We are glad to notice that the cultivation of the silkworm and its necessarily contingent adjunct, the mulberry tree, are receiving the attention of Government. By the proceedings of the Board of Revenue, dated the 5th January last, it will be seen that certain proposals made by the Acting Collector of the district of Coimbatore, in a report to the Board on this subject, are approved of by Government, and that the Government are disposed to give every encouragement to this branch of industry.

THE GREAT KHANDEISH CASE.

Judgment was on Wednesday delivered in what is now known as the Great Khandeish Case, in the Appellate Court, Bombay. The arguments of counsel in the case three weeks ago were heard by five Judges,—the Chief Justice, and Justices Lloyd, Melvill, Kemball, and Green—but on Wednesday Justices Melvill and Green were otherwise engaged, and the three other Judges only were on the bench when the judgment of the Court was delivered by the Chief Justice. In the judgment, which was lengthy and able, the Court traced the course of the case from its beginning, when Sai Nursappa, Govind Narain, and Cassinath Dinkur were first arrested,—and after reviewing every important point in the case, ruled that the convictions of Mr. Pritchard in the case of Sai Nursappa and Govind Narain must be upheld, and that these men must undergo the sentences passed upon them, which in the opinion of the Court were light. In reference to the statement made to the Court by Mr. Anstey, to the effect that torture was applied to the accused men in the presence of Mr. Pritchard, the Court having dealt at considerable length with the question of the license of counsel, proceeded to say that, looking to the fact that though the petition presented to the Sessions Judge referred to the prisoners being put under pain-producing circumstances by the police, it did not contain the slightest suggestion that that torture was practised with the knowledge or sanction of Mr. Pritchard; looking also to the total absence of any insinuation in the argument of the prisoners' vakeels before the Sessions Judge that Mr. Pritchard was any party to the torture; and to the equally profound silence on the same point in the petition presented to the High Court,—the Court did not think it too much to say that the learned counsel for the petitioners would have exercised a sound discretion had he, before suffering himself to be made the medium of a most serious attack upon the character of a magistrate, required from those instructing him some statement upon oath or on solemn affirmation in support of the charge in question, or at least some reasonable ground for believing that the charge might be proved. With regard to the appointment of Mr. Pritchard as public prosecutor, the Court thought that such a proceeding was most objectionable, as Mr. Pritchard, being the magistrate who first convicted the men, had a personal interest in the case. However, looking to the serious reflections on his character, and to the fact that the Judge suggested that he should be appointed public prosecutor, the Court was not disposed severely to censure Mr. Prichard's acceptance of the office; but they were astonished at the Judge for having suggested such a thing. The Court also deeply regretted that Mr. Pritchard should so far have forgotten his duty to the prisoners, as, not only before the enquiry was concluded, but before the enquiry for the prosecution had finished, to have applied for permission to prosecute Govind Narain, Sai Nursappa, and one of their witnesses, Khundoo Sing, in respect of the evidence given by them; but the Court was much surprised and grieved that the Sessions Judge so little knew his duty as to grant the permission.—Bombay Gazette, April 15.

Miscellaneous.

Sir S. Fitzgerald.—The Governor of Bombay left this for the Geer in Kattywar, to have some lion-shooting, on the 11th April.

Medical.—Dr. Knapp, Superintendent under the Professor of the Grant Medical College.

Naval.—H. M. S. Forte, Captain Fairfax, the flag-ship of Rear-Admiral Cockburn, left Bombay on April 11 for the Persian Gulf. The Admiral proceeds with her.

Mr. Seward.—The Hon. W. H. Seward (from America) is at present in Bombay. After paying a visit to Goa he was expected to leave Bombay for Europe by the mail of the 22nd April.

Civil.—Mr. Raymond West, of the Bombay Civil Service, who is expected to return from England next month, is likely to be appointed Acting Judge of the High Court, in room of the Hon. Mr. Justice Lloyd, who has obtained six months' leave.

The Bombay Port Trust.—We are glad to know that, on second thoughts, the Government of India has resolved not to abandon the works on the Elphinstone and the Port. Orders have arrived to go on with them again, pending, we suppose, fresh resolutions or the organisation of that wonderful Port Trust.

Military.—Her Majesty's 56th Regiment arrived in Poona from Bombay by two special trains on Saturday last. The strength of the regiment consists of 33 officers, 14 ladies, 15 children, 930 men, 87 women and 99 children.—Deccan Herald, April 10.—Lieutenant Colonel Bacon, Assistant Adjutant General, and Lieutenant Colonel Shewell, Deputy Judge General, left Mhow on the 2nd instant, on leave to England. Captain Luck, 15th Hussars, is officiating in Lieutenant Colonel Bacon's place until the proper incumbent arrives; and Lieutenant Colonel Williams succeeds Lieutenant Colonel Shewell.—Poona Observer. April 8.

A Story Contradicted.—The statement that the soldier named Picking, who was in company with Robinson, another soldier, when the latter perpetrated a dastardly murder near Asseerghur, had escaped, while a prisoner, is quite incorrect. He was released, we learn, in consequence of the verdict of the court of inquest, which found that the crime had been committed by Robinson only. After being so released he deserted, along with the canteen sergeant and another man—the "middle man"—the canteen sergeant taking away a lot of coin. They have all been apprehended by Captain Fraser, superintendent of police, and will be sent back to Asseerghur.—Bombay Gazette.

To London—Cotton, £3; Seeds, £2. 10s.

IMPORTS.—Bombay, April 8.—Grey Goods—Shirtings: The reported sales of 40-inch goods are smaller than for some weeks past, the total transactions amounting to about 23,000 pieces; 5-4 lbs., at Rs. 3-5-9; 6¼ lbs., Rs. 4-4-6 to 4-6; 7½ lbs., Rs. 5-5-6 to 5-6; 8¼ lbs., Rs. 5-9 to 5-13-6. In 45-inch cloths the quotations are:—7 lbs., Rs. 4-12; 8 lbs., Rs. 5-8-5 to 5-11. In T-Cloths the lighter weight of 29-inch cloths are asked for, other sizes are neglected. Mulapilams of all sorts are scarce, and command full rates; 3 lbs., Rs. 2-1-6 to 2-2-6. Cambrics are in good inquiry, and 60-inch cloths are 1 anna dearer. Jacconets of all sorts are in small supply, and the lower qualities are slightly dearer. Mulls continue in active request, with only small supplies available. The stock of Dhoties appears to be considerable, and prices have a downward tendency. The demand for English Long Cloths and Domestics is quiet. We hear of purchases from first hands, but a considerable business is being done in country-made goods. Bleached Goods: The inquiry is good, and rates, as a rule, are well maintained, Jacconets showing an advance of 1 anna for medium qualities. Dyed and Printed Goods: In Dyed Goods the inquiry is principally for Cambrics, at former prices. Mohrs are scarce, and rather dearer. Turkey Red Goods: A considerable business is passing in the bazaar for all descriptions, the demand being principally for Cambrics, but it is unaccompanied by any advance in price. Twist: There has been very little demand for Twist, and quotations of 30's Water and 40's Mull are barely supported, whilst 20's Water are fully ¼ anna per lb. lower. The higher counts are scarce, and have a slightly upward tendency. Metals: The business in Metals continues to be small, without any important variation in values. Copper and Yellow Metal Braziers are in moderate supply, and prices tend slightly in favour of sellers. All sorts of Iron, with the exception of British Bar, are in good request, and we raise our quotations Rs. 1 to 2 per candy. In Spelter English is inquired for, at a slight improvement. In Lead there is not much doing; prices are unchanged. Quicksilver continues very scarce, and our quotations are little better than nominal.

EXPORTS.—Bombay, April 15.—Cotton: The telegrams received from Liverpool during the week have not been of a favourable character as regards the future of Surats, it being now evident that the American crop must fully come up to, if it does not exceed, the largest estimates current a few months since, and the largely reduced consumption in England of Indian cotton would seem to preclude the possibility of any important advance in prices before the termination of our shipping season. Dealers have given way slightly in price, and buyers have been able to operate at an advantage of about Rs. 2 to 5 per candy, the decline being most marked in Dholleras for delivery during next month. The market is dull at the close. We have no change to notice in other articles of export.

NIGHTINGALE v. MERCER.—The case of Nightingale v. Mercer again came before the Court of Queen's Bench last week. This was the action by Sir Charles Nightingale against Colonel Mercer to recover for the maintenance of his wife, daughter of Sir Charles, and supported by her father for several years during the colonel's absence in India. At the trial before the Lord Chief Justice the jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff for £750. This was an application on the part of Colonel Mercer for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection as to damage, and that the amount awarded was excessive, and also on the ground that the colonel was absent at the time of the trial, and that it was important for him to be enabled to clear his character. After a long hearing it was suggested that the amount of the verdict should be reduced by one-half, and the suggestion was acceded to. The Court gave judgment that on those terms the rule for a new trial should be discharged. As to the question of Colonel Mercer's character, the imputations upon it, contained only in an angry letter of the wife, admitted to have been written under excitement, were stale, and had been, as was obvious, in effect withdrawn and condoned; so that it was unnecessary now to enter into them. The substantial question was as to the willingness of the wife to go out to India in 1862, and the fact that the colonel had done nothing for her support since then. As to the amount awarded, even supposing it to have been too high, and it ought to have been more strictly limited to necessaries actually obtained or moneys actually expended, that objection was disposed of by the reduction of the verdict assented to. Accordingly the application for a new trial was dismissed, the verdict being reduced to the sum of £375.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Friday, April 28, the examination of Dr. Cleghorn was resumed. He enumerated the various Indian woods cultivable in different provinces. The saul of the Terai of Oudh, and the deodar of the slopes of the Himalayas; the teak of the Burman forests, Malabar, and the Nerbuddah, of which there were plantations in British Burmah; the sandal-wood of Mysore, Coorg, and Salem, and the black-woods of Malabar, in the latter second in quality and utility to teak. These were the chief woods. Then followed ebony, various kinds of bamboos, of which there were seven or eight species, including the gigantic bamboo of Burmah; the he bamboo and the she bamboo (so called); the rattan, found abundantly in the Malabar forests with the bamboos, growing to the height of eighty feet or more. All these productions were of commercial value. Along with the bamboos might be named another tree, a species of wild palm, yielding the canes which are a valuable article of commerce. Under the term of minor forest produce came the wild cinnamon of the Malabar forests; the cardamon, found in Coorg, from which the conservator, the Rajah of Travancore, derives a revenue; pepper, a Malabar product, of which there were many gardens, which are private property. Various barks used for tanning were enumerated, which Government at one time made use of for tanning the leather accoutrements of the army. The cassia bark was one of the Indian tanning substances. Gutta-percha came from the forests of Singapore. The forests had been denuded through the demands of commerce for gutta-percha; it was the gum of resinous trees flourishing in Singapore, Borneo, &c. Dr. Montgomery had first found gutta-percha and brought it to notice as an article of commerce. In Assam the tapping of trees for caoutchouc became so general an employment to the people that Government had to put the collecting of this product under regulations devised with the object of preventing the over-tapping of the trees, which was injurious to them. Dammah, wood-oil, and varnish, came from Indian forests. The gum copal is also the basis of a varnish; gamboge is a valuable product of the Malabar forests; certain useful vegetable dyes were obtained, and many varieties of gums. To minor products of the forests were to be added honey and beeswax, largely collected in India by the Hill tribes, who were allowed prescriptive rights to gather, which it would be impolitic to interfere with. Pimento, or alspice, was found in the plantations on the Malabar coast and Cochin. The bread-fruit tree, arica, or betel-nut and cocoa—came under the land, and not under the forest conservancy. The satinwoods and Chittagong wood recommend themselves as well suited for cultivation on the Government plantations of Madras. Charcoal and gunpowder-charcoal were manufactured out of dogwood and other plants; the Government conserved the best for charcoal in certain localities. Among valuable trees were jackwood and mahogany; Government plantations of the latter had been commenced in Bengal. The dhoon was a tree of the wood-oil kind, and it was used for timber in Ceylon. The foregoing list of woods and products served in some measure to show the immense resources (medical and economical) to be developed under the system of forest management now in its infancy.

The beginning of forest conservancy dated from 1856. Since then (the witness stated) a revenue had been gradually obtained from the forests of India which had reached £500,000 per year. From this, however, was to be deducted an expenditure which left a net revenue of £122,000. The area of forest preservation, cultivation, and general management extended over a vast extent of country, which he could not at the moment compute; but about 27,000 square miles of reserve forest land had been demarcated. The expenses had, certainly, absorbed revenue; but the balances had now taken a turn, and he had no doubt the profits to revenue would now go on increasing at a considerable ratio. But, independent of revenue, the forest system introduced in India was most beneficial to the country for climatic considerations, as well for the general prosperity of the people. The Kumari practice of the natives with the forests—that of destroying a valuable forest for the sake of a crop of inferior grain—was highly injurious, and had been forbidden. The Forest Conservancy Department and the revenue authorities worked amicably together in protecting the existing woodlands, and the better tracts were everywhere being demarcated and reserved. One of the earliest emporiums for timber was established by the East India Company at Cochin. The utilisation and value of the timber obtained depended, of course, much on the means of transit; and, consequently, the Department of Forests directed attention to the improvement of forest roads and water communication. The general practice of using leaves for fuel had latterly prevented the common use of manure as fuel by the natives, the manure being so useful in the cultivation of the soil that to use it for fuel was wasteful and improvident. The collection of fuel woods formed a principal duty of the forest conservators. The smaller loppings were those which were used for fuel. The timber of the Central Provinces, which he (the witness) had not visited, but had information regarding, was not so large as that of Malabar. The teak of Malabar was far superior.

Having explained the mode of preparing timber for fuel, the witness replied to questions regarding the means of transit for the produce of the plantations, &c, in the Central Provinces, the Neilgherries, &c. He stated that there were difficulties affecting transit in the more out-of-the way districts which came within the limits of the Conservancy. Such was the case in the Central Provinces, where teak, inferior to that of Malabar, was abundant. But the value of teak as a marketable commodity in the form of timber depended upon the facilities for felling it and carrying the timber. If the Godavery, which was the only river in the Central Provinces, were rendered navigable—which it was not in some parts—the timber could be carried by it, and thus the best advantage could be taken of the teak of this part of India. The teak-wood was not only valuable for ship-building, but for the minor produce it afforded, such as the oils. In the Neilgherries the plantations were assisted by the recent road-making. The increase of barrack accommodation for the troops had caused a great demand for timber, which the Government sought to obtain from the Forest Conservancy. Referring next to Cashmere forests, it was stated that plans had been completed this year for the surveying and demarcation of the province. The subject next turned upon the revenue and expenditure. The witness stated that they had reached the turning-point when revenue began to prove profitable. But, independently of profits, the forestal processes acted beneficially upon climatic influences.

In reply to questions respecting the supply of fuel, the witness said that in some parts of the Punjab and other very dry lands in India there was a great deficiency of firewood. In some parts the natives actually burnt manures for want of other kind of fuel; but the manufacture of timber loggings and the sale of the wood saved the land from the impoverishment consequent on the burning of the more useful manure. Was acquainted with some of the forests of the Himalayas by personal exploration during two years. The plantation system has at present been only carried on upon a very small scale in this region. Agricultural machinery and saw-mills had been introduced for the forestal purposes. The railways of India were now supplied, to some extent, with the requisite hard timber for sleepers; but the demand was, at present, greater than the supply, as railways were so greatly extending throughout the country. Railways were also supplied with timber for fuel. A wood, named the deodar, being a remarkably hard wood, not liable to splitting, was found suitable for railroad sleepers. The ironwoods of Arracan were similarly suitable for sleepers; but there were also some other woods from which the sleepers were manufactured. The demand for fuel by railways drained the stores of this kind of timber (loggings). There was no coal but what was imported for railway purposes; but native coal from the mines discovered in the Nerbudda, &c., would be soon probably available for use. The coal used for railways in India was more than three times the price of wood fuel. It required a very large supply of wood to effect the object of coal for railway locomotion. On the Madras Railway, during the last three or four years, wood fuel was used mixed with a little coal. The railroad contractors arranged with the Government for the supply of the wood fuel; but the supply comes also from private sources.

In reply to questions regarding the spice-bearing trees found in Malabar, the witness said the cultivation was conducted under licenses and contracts. The shell-lac produce was obtained largely in Bengal under licenses. Certain trees were here named as valuable for their medicinal qualities as astringents, &c. Asked again as to the communications with the plantations, the witness stated the Forest Department had been engaged opening up canals and making roads wherever desirable. This was so in respect to the Malabar plantations of teak. The maintenance of the forest preserves was entrusted to those who knew the sort of wood that ought to be preserved, and the forest-keepers employed were such persons. Scientific botanists were wanted, however, as well as merely the European and native forest-keepers. The reproduction of trees for good timbers was best carried on on the banks of navigable rivers. The Forest Department in India extended at this time over a space of country as large as the whole of the British Islands. During the last eight years there had been a steady increase of revenue. The preliminary outlays at first were great, but experience taught us to economise. Their staff was not very costly. There were about eighty-eight Europeans employed as conservators of upper and lower grades, each of whom had a district under his charge. The forestal service had been the means of causing the natives to improve their dwellings in some parts, more particularly in the Mahratta country. Better timber was put into their hands wherewith to build. They were now endeavouring to obtain a larger number of skilled officers for the forestal service. When returning from India, he visited the forest schools of Italy, Germany, and France, and then saw that much was to be learned from their experience, from which he had profited in his superintendence. There was in France a noble institution devoted to instruction in forestry. There were others in Germany. He had seen a notification from the Governor-General of India to the effect that when a proper number of natives had been trained they would be employed in the forests. It had been contemplated by the Government that a training-school should be formed in Upper India. Great Britain had no such institutions for forestal instruction as France and Germany. The persons employed in the Indian service were required to possess a knowledge of levelling, surveying, and other arts connected with civil engineering. The commencement of cultivating the Indian forests, for the purpose of developing their resources to commerce, dated as far back as 1842. The Department had imported the Australian woods. Through the zealous recognition and assistance of the late Sir Wm. Dennison and Sir Wm. Fergusson specimens of the Cassiarina and other indigenous woods of Australia had been obtained for experimental trials. The plantations cultivated by the Rajah of Travancore in his own right were particularly flourishing estates; but the Rajah had not issued any return of cost and production. He had himself professionally given advice to the Rajah on cultivation. The expenses attendant upon working the plantation system throughout India was, say, £700 per acre per annum. He would obtain for the committee proper returns from India on this head.

T. L. Seccombe, Esq., C.B., of the Finance Department of the India office, gave evidence regarding the successive impositions of income-tax in India, this financial testimony being followed by other evidence relating to the revenue derived from the payments made by the Native States for the protection afforded by the troops lent to the different chiefs by the Supreme Government. [A full report of Mr. Seccombe's evidence will be given in our next.]

The committee resumed its sittings on Tuesday, the 2nd inst., when Sir Cecil Beadon, late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, was examined on two subjects—the revenue from salt as manufactured in Bengal, and the opium trade and revenue of Bengal. The witness first dealt with the salt monopoly. As with opium, the Government method was to encourage production of salt by advances to the ryots; it bought of the grower, and sold at arbitrary or fixed prices at large profits. In 1867-68 the produce of the salt monopoly was £5,726,093, and therefore, after the land and the opium revenues, the third best as a leading source of revenue. The evidence referred almost entirely to Bengal, with which Sir Cecil Beadon's connection as an Indian official of many years' experience, and in later years as Lieutenant-Governor, rendered him intimately acquainted. The information about salt bore chiefly upon the Governmental system of production. The salt cultivation under protection has been abandoned in Bengal. The witness, in the course of his lengthy evidence, corrected his statements regarding the anomalous portion of the salt revenue in the last few years, by observing that when the Government abandoned its monopoly, they had accumulated vast stores of the manufactured article. By a return produced—of date September, 1869—it was ascertained that the stores conserved as above stated were now exhausted.

On Friday, the 5th inst., Sir Cecil Beadon and Sir F. Halliday were successively examined on the salt and opium revenues. Reports of their evidence will follow in succeeding numbers of the Mail.

Miscellaneous.

INDIAN FINANCE COMMITTEE.—The name of Haviland Burke, Esq., M.P., has been added to the list of the Indian Finance Committee.

JUDICIAL APPOINTMENT.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Maxwell Melvill, Esq., of the Bombay Civil Service, to be Puisne Judge of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay.

CALL TO THE BAR.—Thomas Jones, Esq., of the University of Dublin, Assistant Secretary to the Government of Bengal, was called to the degree of the utter bar by the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple on the 1st inst.

THE BURMESE ENVOYS.—On May 4 the Burmese Envoys, accompanied by Captain Sprye, arrived in Liverpool from Manchester, where they had been visiting for a few days, and were received by the Secretary of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, who conducted them to their apartments at the North-Western Hotel.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 3rd inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £296,000, to Bombay, £100,000, and Madras, £4,000. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10¾d. will receive about 5 per cent., and on Bombay at 1s. 10½d. about 45 per cent. Those above, in full.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL OUTRAM.—The Commissioners for Woods and Forests have given a site of land on the Thames Embankment, adjacent to the Hungerford Bridge, for the erection of a monument to the memory of General Outram, the funds for which have been raised by private subscription of personal friends. Mr. Webster, the contractor for the Thames Embankment, has experienced considerable difficulty in the excavation for the foundation for the column, as, owing to the ingress of water, the shaft, which was originally contracted for at a depth of 22ft., had to be carried down to a depth of 44 ft. before solid ground could be reached.

INDIAN DOOB-GRASS.—Among the plants which have received honour and religious veneration among the Hindoos, the Doob-grass (Cynodon dactylon) holds a prominent place. Its usefulness, added to its beauty, induced them in their earliest ages to consider it the abode of a benevolent nymph, and it is employed in many of their religious ceremonies. It owes much of its honour to its great tenacity of life, being regarded as an emblem of immortality; and the Veda celebrates it, under one of its names, in words which indicates its supposed mystic origin:—"May Durva, which rose from the water of life, which has a hundred roots and a hundred stems, efface a hundred of my sins, and prolong my existence for a hundred years." The extreme rapidity of growth in this grass is here referred to, and it is stated that by merely chopping it in pieces and sprinkling these on prepared ground, a verdant sward may be obtained in a few weeks. The Doob-grass is frequently introduced by name in the popular stories of the country, and the roots are esteemed medicinal.—Nature.

ALBERT ARBITRATION BILL.—The House of Commons Committee appointed to try the merits of the Albert Arbitration Bill met on Thursday, Mr. Gathorne Hardy in the chair. The measure, it may be remembered, has already received the assent of the House of Lords. Mr. Denison, Q.C., opened the case for the Bill, and said the only hope for this unfortunate concern was to refer it to an arbitrator, who could settle at once all questions of law, determine the liabilities of the various parties, and, if found necessary, frame a reconstruction scheme of his own. The feeble opposition now offered to the Bill came from about eight policy-holders out of 25,000, and some seven official liquidators, who, for the sake of their own professional interests, might not regret seeing this case become another illustration of "Jarndyce and Jarndyce" in "Bleak House," which ended in a settlement just when the share and estate of everybody concerned had been swallowed up in costs. Mr. James Thomson the gentleman referred to, gave evidence in support of the preamble, and the Committee adjourned.

A NEW SHIP CANAL.—On Wednesday, the 3rd of May, a numerous and influential deputation waited on the Duke of Argyll, on the part of the East India Association, to lay before his Grace a memorial from that body in support of a scheme brought forward by Sir James Elphinstone for cutting a channel through the narrow neck of land projecting from the continent of India, which separates the Gulf of Manaar from the Palk Straits, and thus preventing the necessity of steamers and large ships going round the island of Ceylon. The deputation was introduced by Mr. E. B. Eastwick, M.P., who briefly stated the object of the address. The memorial was read by Mr. William Tayler, who explained shortly the grounds on which the Association had thought it its duty to support the proposal, and the details of the plan were then succinctly and clearly set forth by the projector. Sir James Elphinstone, M.P., Sir A. Cotton, Mr. J. B. Smith, M.P., Mr. Maitland, Mr. Birley, M.P., and several other gentlemen spoke in support of the project, and Mr. W. S. Fitzwilliam, in an eloquent and emphatic speech, supported the project as one which would secure great advantages, not to Indian shipping alone but to the commerce of the whole civilised world. The Duke of Argyll received the deputation with his usual courtesy, and listened with marked attention to the several addresses. At the close of the discussion his Grace frankly admitted that if the statements made by the several members of the deputation were correct, which he did not doubt, and if the work could be executed at the cost estimated, or anything near it, it would doubtless be worthy of adoption, and he, therefore, would address the Indian Government with the view of obtaining an official estimate, and then give his best consideration to the subject.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, May 1.—THE INDIAN MUTINY MEDALS.—Mr. KINNAIRD asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether there was any hope of the Indian Mutiny medals being speedily distributed to the officers and men of the 81st Regiment, a very small number having as yet been given, and great disappointment being felt by the rest of the regiment at the long delay which had occurred; and whether in future it would not be possible to avoid such delays in the distribution of medals.—Mr. GRANT DUFF replied that the medals referred to by the hon. member had within the last few days been sent to the War Office for distribution. He could assure the hon. member there had been no undue delay on the part of the War Office. The grant of the medals was only extended to the regiment in which the hon. member was interested—the 81st—by a General Order, dated the 12th of August, 1868. As soon as the list of claimants was received from the commanding officer—in May, 1870—it was forwarded to India, and on its return to the India Office, on the 27th of December last, the medals were ordered to be made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, May 4.—TROOPS IN INDIA.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, in answer to Lord E. CECIL, said—The best answer I can give to the noble lord's questions will, I think, be to read an extract from a speech delivered by General Norman in the Legislative Council, who said, on the 24th of March, 1871:—"The stations with the least mortality in the plains were Muttra, where the deaths were only at the rate of 5½ per 1,000; Shahjehanpore, 6½; Seetapore, 7½; Roorkee, 9½; and Fort William, 12½; as compared with the hundred per thousand of former days. Excluding small detachments, the deaths were highest at Jubbulpore, where they amounted to 40 per 1,000; Peshawur, 33 per 1,000; and Morar, 32 per 1,000. At the hill stations the deaths averaged 11 per 1,000, and at the Hill Convalescent Depots, composed of men who had suffered from sickness, 22½ per 1,000. The Government is fully sensible of the advantage of having troops in the hills, and two admirable hill stations are being pushed on to completion—those of Chakrata and Ranceekhet; but it is not intended to give up important strategic points, or to remove men from good barracks in healthy stations in the plains, though even from these convalescents and working parties may go to the hills annually. The employment of working parties has been most successful in every respect, and during the last hot season no less than 1,170 men were employed, to the benefit of their health and general efficiency, and also to great public advantage in other ways. During the coming hot season we hope to have a total of 6,438 men in the hills in this presidency, and a larger number of the remainder will be well-housed at healthy stations in the plains."

HOUSE OF LORDS, FRIDAY, May 5.—OUR ARTILLERY FORCES.—Lord CARNARVON, in moving for returns showing the force of artillery in England, reverted to the lesson taught by the late campaign in France as to the supreme importance of artillery in modern warfare. He complained not only that our artillery force is far below the proportion adopted by Continental armies, but that the number of our batteries is really lower than even a peace establishment at home justified. Instead of considerably less than 400 guns, the War-office ought to have, for a force of 300,000 men, 900 guns fully equipped, and independent of the Reserves, the garrison force, and coast defences.—Lord HARDINGE regretted that the artillery had not been increased to a larger extent.—The Duke of ARGYLL, alluding to an impression that the reduction of the artillery in India and the increase in England were connected together, explained that the former step was decided on by the Government of India long before it was known that the Home force was to be increased. In concluding their financial arrangements, the Government of India decided to reduce the force by five batteries of field and three of garrison artillery, all its members considering that this was expedient and safe, with the exception of Lord Napier of Magdala, who had some objection to it, and it was but natural for an Indian Commander-in-Chief to dislike a reduction of the force. This decision was approved by the India Office at home, which thereupon proposed to the War Office that these batteries should be absorbed at home.—After some further discussion, Lord NORTHBROOK cited figures to show the large increase of Artillery provided in the Army Estimates of the present year; he replied seriatim to the allegations of Lord Carnarvon, pointing out that an additional sum of £500,000 was about to be expended on the Artillery, and he expressed an opinion that a force of three hundred and thirty-six guns, which was double that maintained of late years, would be quite sufficient for our defence. There was rather a disposition in the present day to overestimate the force of Artillery requisite for our peace establishment, which was stronger than the peace establishment of any other country.—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE believed that it would be impossible always to keep up our Horse and Field Artillery on a war establishment; last year we had 180 guns, which were now increased to 336, and this addition was fairly proportionate to the wants of the service. Doubting whether the Artillery Militia, who were admirable adjuncts for garrison defence, could be drilled to any useful purpose as Field Artillery in the limited time for which they were called out, he said that the essential thing was to keep up Cadres of the Artillery and Cavalry, so that those branches could be expanded if the emergency arose. Under all the circumstances, the strength of the Artillery for the present year must be regarded as satisfactory.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, May 5.—SUPERSESSION OF COLONELS.—In answer to Colonel ANSON, Mr. CARDWELL said,—The Royal Commission have reported that the recommendations of the committee of last year cannot, as the law now stands, be carried into effect by the Executive Government. On the 4th of April I wrote to the India Office, enclosing a copy of the report of the Royal Commission, and proposing legislation on the subject, but I have not yet received a reply.

NOTICE OF MOTION.—Colonel SYKES gave notice that he would, on an early day, call attention to the charges upon the revenues of India of £136. 13s. 11d. (or £144. 9s. 5d.) for ten months' drilling of a cavalry recruit, and £63. 8s. 5d. (or £66. 19s.) for seven months' drilling of an infantry recruit for filling up vacancies in the ranks of the European troops in India, as compared with the average cost per recruit of £26. 7s. 5d. while the government of India was under the East India Company; and would move "that these charges are enormously in excess of what can be possibly required for the purpose of properly recruiting the British army in India, and should be reduced."

PETITION PRESENTED.—By Mr. EASTWICK, from the Bombay Association and other inhabitants of the Bombay Presidency, with 3,351 signatures, praying attention to the state of the finances and the financial administration of British India, and that the petition may be referred to the Select Committee on Indian Finances.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 22; Agra, April 20; Calcutta and Madras, April 19.

THE Madras Government Order regarding the 19th N.I. will be found elsewhere. It appears to deal out impartial justice to the chief offenders both among the officers and the men, so far at least as we have yet learned. The removal from their commands of Colonel Cholmeley, Lieut. Colonels Firth and Bowen, the wing officers, and Captain Atkinson, the Adjutant, would seem to be justified by the various faults of omission or commission which together produced the insubordinate outbreak that has ended in the dismissal of one whole company, and of the men composing the Quarter-Guard of the Regiment on a certain evening in February. Colonel Cholmeley's share in the general blundering is sufficiently explained in Lord Napier's Order. It was only meet that the worst offenders among the Sepoys should suffer condign punishment for their mutinous mode of seeking redress for a just grievance. The chief fault of the other three English officers seems to have lain in their utter carelessness to acquaint themselves with the rules of the service. The men were quite right in expecting two months' advance of pay on their departure to a foreign station. By the rules of the service they were entitled to that, in view of the arrangements they had to make for leaving their families at home and paying any debts they might themselves have incurred. But their officers persisted in offering them only one month's advance, and the latest consequences, however unpleasant, of such perverse or ignorant blundering, can hardly be deemed unjust to those concerned.

Two of these officers are quite new to their regiment, their names not appearing in the "Army List" for January last. One of them, Colonel Firth, appears to have replaced Colonel Jenkins, who, according to the Madras Mail, was removed from his command for having worried his men on the march from Kurnool to Gooty by making them march all the way with knapsacks on and fixed bayonets. This little matter apart however, it is certain that constant changes in the higher commissioned ranks of native regiments officered under the present system must play the mischief with the moral tone of the men. The whole system is radically bad, but there is surely no need to go out of the way in order to make bad worse.

SIR SEYMOUR FITZGERALD having returned from his shooting trip among the lions of Kattywar—too late to meet Mr. Seward at the farewell dinner given to the erewhile Foreign Secretary of Mr. Lincoln by the Byculla Club—presided on the 21st at the meeting of his Legislative Council. Thanks to the outcry raised by the native public and enforced by the able pleading of three of his councillors, Sir Seymour has consented to withdraw his preposterous Bill for a tax on native feasts, a piece of legislation worthy to compare with the sumptuary edicts of our own Plantagenent and Tudor princes. Still bent on raising money somehow, the Governor of Bombay is said to have proposed replacing the condemned impost by a graduated marriage-tax, which sounds hardly less objectionable. A light tax not on marriages but on all kinds of noisy public processions might have more to say for itself, if money could not be raised by some method less likely to clash with native feeling.

WE have no further details of Lord Mayo's progress since his brief visit to Lucknow, where he arrived on the 19th April from Cawnpore. His inspection of the Machi Bhawan, which Sir H. Lawrence held for a time, in 1857, ended in a decision to let the old fort stand for the present. In the evening he started on a shooting trip for Seetapore.

GENERAL BARROW is reported to be mending slowly, but there seems little chance of his entire recovery without a trip to England. It was arranged that in the event of his coming home Sir G. Couper would act as Chief Commissioner of Oudh. The General's illness had caused widespread sorrow among the natives of Oudh, with whom he has long been a special favourite.

MR. SEWARD appears to have left India with a generally pleased impression of all he has seen there, and with very kindly feelings towards all who have entertained him on his travels. At the Byculla Club dinner he expressed his admiration of our "proconsular" system, quoted instances of its excellent working, and went so far as to opine that ere long we shall cease to feel the need of "maintaining an Indian army to hold these possessions, and a European army to watch the Indian one." It was very good of him to say so, but even Englishmen are not superhuman, and we must beg to doubt the early advent of so happy a time.

WE are sorry to hear that General Innes, formerly of the old 14th Bengal N.I., died at Simla on the 10th May, from the effects of an accidental fall.

ACCORDING to a recent telegram, the case of Ameer Khan and Hashmadad Khan, the alleged Wahabies removed for trial to Patna, came before Mr. Justice Phear and two other judges at Calcutta. The Advocate-General opposed the attempt to transfer a criminal case from a Mofussil Court, arguing that the High Court had no power, except as a Court of Appeal, to order the transfer. No such power existed in the old Supreme or Sudder Courts, nor had any such been conferred by the Charter of 1865. The counsel for the prisoners, on the other hand, maintained that after the fusion of the Supreme and Sudder Courts into the High Court, new powers were added to those previously existing. Several instances were brought forward, which did not seem quite to fit the present case. This point was reserved however, and the Advocate-General then showed cause why the trial should come off at Patna, the chief seat of the treason alleged. In England the trial would take place in the county where the crime had been committed. With regard to the affidavits in support of the present application, he averred that many of them were undoubtedly false, and nearly all were made by persons of doubtful character. The case was still going on last Monday; the chief objection to a trial before the Judge of Patna, who has had no legal training, being still to discuss.

In answer to recent complaints about his interference with the treaty rights of English traders, the King of Burmah is said in a recent telegram to have officially repudiated all desire to establish trade monopolies. By way of proving his good faith, he has given two entertainments, one to European and East Indian, another to Mogul and Chinese merchants.

The Viceroy was to arrive at Simla on May 5, and hold his first Council there the next day.

General Donald Stewart has been appointed to act as Superintendent of the Andaman Islands.

Prince Azeem Jah has at length been gratified by the formal announcement of his promotion to the rank of Prince of Arcot. On the 12th April Lord Napier (of Madras) publicly presented him with her Majesty's letters patent, conferring the title for something like which he has so long been agitating with an importunity that nothing could withstand.

It seems, from a recent order of Lord Napier (of Magdala), that the practice of teaching infantry soldiers a certain amount of gun-drill—a practice introduced into the Indian Army about twenty years ago—has for some time fallen into general disuse. Lord Napier however is determined not to put up with any further neglect of a practice so useful in time of need. He has accordingly drawn the attention of general officers to the existing orders on the subject, and requests that those officers will take means to carry them out, wherever and whenever the requisite means are available. When heavy guns are not within reach, field-gun drill is to be substituted.

The report of the capture of Herat by Yakoob Khan turns out as groundless as it certainly looked. A Calcutta telegram of May 12 reports an engagement between the Ameer's rebel son and the Herat garrison, in which the former was defeated. Herat itself is said to be in good heart. A telegram four days older had announced the siege of that city, and the scarcity of provisions within its walls. The Governor was then waiting for reinforcements. In all likelihood it was the appearance of these which led to the engagement that ended so badly for Yakoob Khan. A severe famine was also reported in the neighbourhood of Herat.

Colonel Strachey's Exposition of Indian Public Works contains some interesting details regarding Indian Railways. The East Indian system, including the lately opened Jubbulpore section, has a total length of 1,501 miles, representing a capital of about 30 millions. Its gross revenue now amounts to nearly three millions, and the working charges to about £1,400,000. The receipts average £2,000 a mile per annum, or not far from £39 a week, which will bear comparison with the average of European lines. Of the Great Indian Peninsula system, with a total capital of 27 millions, 1,257 miles are now open, and 15 more remain to open. Its gross revenue is a little under two millions, and the gross receipts are about £1,600 a mile, or £31 a week. Unlike the first-named, it still fails to cover the guaranteed interest by 30 per cent., owing to the heavy cost of repairs for a large number of masonry works. The Madras line, which has just been opened right through, has a total length of 854 miles on a capital of ten millions. Its gross income of about £600,000 represents an annual value of £720 a mile, equal to nearly £14 per mile per week. This railway pays at present only three per cent. out of the five guaranteed. Of the Punjab, Sindh, and Delhi lines there is a total length of 662 miles on a capital of 9½ millions. The working charges take more than £350,000 out of a gross income of £500,000, or £25 per week. These lines yield a net profit of only 1½ per cent. Still less fortunate is the Indus Flotilla, which forms a part of the same undertaking. The Bombay and Baroda line of 307 miles, with a capital of 7½ millions, earns about £500,000 a-year, of which £330,000 go for working expenses. Its income averages £31 a week, but the heavy working charges reduce the net profits to 2 per cent. on the capital. The Eastern Bengal line, on the other hand, nearly pays the guarantee already, on a total length of 157 miles open, and a capital of 2¾ millions. It yields about £270,000 a year, or nearly £33 a week. Very different is the Great Southern of India, the cheapest line yet made in the country, yet one of the least profitable, yielding only about 2 per cent. on a capital of 1½ million, and a total length of 168 miles. Of the Oudh and Rohilkund system, 706 miles long, only 42 miles are yet completed, but 500 more will probably be opened in 1873.

Several of these railways are still adding to their length. The Madras line has a branch of about twenty-five miles under progress to the foot of the Nilgherries, which is not likely to pay the guaranteed interest. The Great Southern of India is to have an extension of 210 miles to Tuticorin which, if carried out on the broad guage, will be equally unprofitable, in Colonel Strachey's opinion. An extension of seventy-seven miles from Ahmedabad to Wudwan is being made by the Bombay and Baroda Company, who expect from it more than Colonel Strachey does. He maintains the hopelessness of competing with the seaborne trade by means of a railway carried round the circumference of a circle. Its only chance of success would be to work it in aid of the seaborne traffic. Besides these extensions the new Camorta Company has projected a line of a hundred miles to Cuddalore. For this line also the Colonel predicts a permanent failure, if it is carried out under the broad guage.

From Mr. Howell's recent Memorandum on the Educational Statistics of British India, we learn that the school-going population of that country is reckoned at twenty-five millions, if not more. Out of this total the number of pupils in national schools and colleges amounts to 1,096,028, distributed among 37,064 schools. There are about half-a-million pupils altogether in the purely Government institutions, of whom 4,683 are studying in the 31 colleges; the remainder being divided among the 10,575 schools. The 20 Aided Colleges contain 1,789 pupils, while nearly 300,000 pupils are taught in 7,572 Aided Schools. In what are called the Unaided Schools, 2,362 in number, there are 39,337 pupils. The remaining quarter of a million attend the 16,231 Indigenous Schools. Bombay shows the largest number of pupils of all kinds, 207,290, and of Government scholars 152,845, in 2,494 schools; Madras the largest number of Unaided Schools, 1,140, and of pupils in them, 21,453. The North-Western Provinces rank next to Bombay in the aggregate of pupils, Bengal standing third only; the Punjab fourth, and Madras fifth. In the North-West there are 3,674 Government scholars, but the scholars in them are 23,000 fewer than in Bombay. Oudh, with its eleven millions of people, has only 36,640 pupils, or 19,000 fewer than British Burmah, with its population of only 2,395,985. Out of nearly the same population, only 16,917 pupils are reckoned up in the Berars. The North-West, Punjab, and British Burmah show the largest number of pupils in the indigenous schools. Bengal has 9 Government and 6 aided colleges, Madras 8 of each kind, the North-West 6 of one and 4 of the other, which contain between them 500 more scholars than the 15 colleges of Bengal, and 2,400 more than the 16 colleges of Madras.

There are altogether 2,769 schools and colleges where English is taught to 165,831 scholars—a proportion far too small to meet the native. Out of that total, Bengal claims 60,149 taught in 860 schools, Madras 41,622 with 681 schools, while only 20,000 attend 410 schools in the North-West Provinces, and 17,533 attend 241 schools in Bombay. In the Punjab 8,763 learn English in 176 schools, while in the Berars 141 schools turn out only 1,639 scholars.

The whole cost of educating 1,096,028 pupils amounts to £1,210,076. 17s. 2d., or little more than a pound a head. To this sum the Imperial Exchequer contributes £622,575, the remainder being raised by local cesses and subscriptions. For Bengal the Imperial grant is £184,245, against £132,262 supplied from local sources. In the North-West the proportions are nearly equal; £93,430 to £94,570. In Madras the Imperial outlay £98,486 exceeds the local by about £15,000. In Bombay on the other hand the local outlay is £146,110 to £89,157 furnished by the State. In Sindh, Oudh, and British Burmah the local outlay markedly exceeds the Imperial. The Central Provinces also contribute more than half of the £50,950 laid out on their own schools. The Berars take from the Central Government about six times, and Mysore about twice as much as the amount of its local outlay. Of the £108,399 expended in the Punjab the Imperial grant supplies £57,637. The total cost to the State for Direction and Inspection amounts to £96,001, out of which Bengal takes about 27 per cent. for a staff of sixty-one Europeans and 1,224 natives, Bombay 20 per cent. for thirty-three Europeans and 1,444 natives; while in Madras forty-seven European and 331 natives require about 18 per cent., and in the North-West thirty-nine Europeans and 774 natives cost as much as 34 per cent. The Punjab takes 13 per cent. for its small staff of thirty-two European and 145 native directors, inspectors, and teachers, while the Central Provinces receive only 2 per cent. for thirteen Europeans and 269 natives. Altogether there are nine Directors, all European, and 342 Inspectors, of whom forty-two only are European. Of the schoolmasters 244 are European to 4,7[illegible] natives. It cannot be alleged that so small a proportion of white men is unfair to the natives, whose relative numbers are steadily increasing, and many of whom, according to Mr. Howell, are already qualifying as masters and inspectors for the higher post of a Director. In the interests of an English education we would rather see some present increase of the European element, but one great hindrance to the spread of English schools undoubtedly lies in their greater costliness. In time perhaps it may be feasible to secure for such schools a competent staff of teachers from among the natives themselves.

By an unlucky oversight the Pioneer's statement regarding an order from home to reduce the furlough of officers who retain their appointments on half-staff pay, from two years to one only, was inserted in our last issue without the needful correction. We take the earliest opportunity therefore to deny the truth of a statement so startling that the Pioneer itself could "hardly believe it," in spite of the "grave authority" whence which it was made. We are glad to assure our readers that [illegible] such order has ever been issued by the India Office, nor is anything of the kind likely to come under discussion there.

The Duke of Argyll's answer to the deputation which recently waited on him in behalf of a scheme for making a good ship-channel between Madras and Ceylon, must have gratified all who heard it. "If the canal can be cut, gentlemen, for anything like the sum you mention, all I can say is, that it should be set about immediately." It was not indeed the Indian Government only, he went on to say, who were interested in a scheme that would benefit Ceylon also and England; but his Grace would willingly further its execution by sending out word at once to India, in order that Mr. Robertson, the engineer now employed on Indian harbours, might carry out the necessary surveys and draw up estimates of the probable cost. With regard to the estimated outlay of ninety or a hundred thousand pounds, such a sum could be raised here to-morrow, if the right to levy a small toll were only guaranteed to the contributors. We do not see however why the Indian Government should not take the venture into its own hands. The cutting of a channel through 250 yards of sandbank and two miles of the long tongue of land that stretches from the Madras coast towards Adam's Bridge, would open out a large landlocked harbour which, if connected with the railway from Madura, would supersede Tuticorin as the place of export for cotton from Southern India.

The Methodists appear to be exulting in the conversion of "the great Indian reformer, Baboo Chunder Sen," as described in a letter of March 2 from Dr. Thorburn at Lucknow. We hope they do not wish us to believe that they have got hold of the genuine Keshab Chandar Sen, the Brâmoist leader, but the way they speak of their grand catch would almost show they did. All we need say is that the Lucknow convert is quite another and much smaller personage than his namesake at Calcutta.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, May 16, 1871.

LORD SALISBURY ON INDIAN GRIEVANCES.

In presenting petitions from the people of Madras and Calcutta, for a Royal Commission to inquire into certain grievances arising from the present mode of governing India, Lord Salisbury owned to a very imperfect sympathy with the prayer of his clients. He thought that the general principle of Indian finance "required consideration," and that the Viceroy's Council "might be selected with more careful attention to the interests of the people at large." But when he passed from generals to particulars, his antagonism to the views of the petitioners at once asserted itself. At heart a pure despot, his Lordship cannot tolerate the slightest approach to popular government. It pleases him to think that the Indian ideal of finance is "the idea of repose," and therefore he deprecates the present system of annual budgets as "a dangerous interference with the peace of the natives." What but mischief, he asks, in effect, can come of rousing them from their normal slumbers to compare their present with their former burdens? To bother them with annual budgets and fresh taxation is wantonly to augment the difficulties and dangers of our rule. In like manner his Lordship protested against any attempt to introduce representative government among a people to whom such things were altogether strange and naturally unsuited. To give the Legislative Council more of a representative character would not only throw everything into confusion, but would also tend to "subject the Government to the influence of a narrow though influential class, consisting partly of Englishmen and partly of natives, but wholly distinct from the vast mass of the people."

This sort of reasoning labours under one small disadvantage—it assumes a state of things which no longer exists. There is no use in trying to mop out the Atlantic. Lord Salisbury may deem it possible to outvie Canute, and bid the rising tide not only stop where it is, but go backwards. The laws of nature however and the logic of facts are too strong for such blind worshippers of the past. His Lordship's talents would be better employed in trying to regulate the movement he would seek so vainly to arrest. The mischief, if it is mischief, of unsettling the native mind is already done. The yearly budget has become an institution. The people of India have enjoyed some kind of virtual representation in the Supreme Council for nearly twenty years past. The Press of India has been free for nearly twice that period. European culture and enterprise are everywhere leavening the native mind and eating into the crust of Eastern habit. The need for new taxation involves new concessions of some kind to the tax-payers, who have already learned the secret of combination for political ends. In the face of these facts it is idle to advocate a return to the patriarchal policy of other days. If Lord Salisbury's arguments mean anything, we ought to undo the whole of our recent work in India, and renew that happy state of things which prevailed when "interlopers" might be deported at a moment's notice, when the Company enjoyed a monopoly of the Indian trade, when Sudder Judges administered Regulation Law without fear of criticism from English barristers, when no one had thought of establishing government schools, and Lancashire had not yet learned to take a lively interest in the growth of Indian cotton.

As it is simply impossible however to retrace our steps, would it not be as well to keep moving gently forward with the times? It is rather too early yet for a Native Parliament, but something might be done towards strengthening the popular element in the Legislative Council. The interference even of "a narrow class" partly European and partly native would save the Government from many serious mistakes, and pave the way for further experiments in the same direction. With regard to the native prayer for a Royal Commission of enquiry into existing grievances, we certainly cannot with the Duke of Argyll read it as "a vote of censure on the existing Government of India both in India and at home." It simply means a demand that ample evidence should be taken on certain subjects not from one class only but from all, and that such evidence could best be taken in India. Save for the greater ease of conducting a searching enquiry on the spot, there need be no practical difference between a Royal Commission and the present Committee, if the work of the latter is only carried out in perfect good faith. For that end witnesses must be encouraged to come over to England. There are not a few native gentlemen competent and willing under certain conditions to give useful evidence before the Committee, and there must be at least two or three members of the Committee qualified to address them in their own tongues. One of our correspondents lately suggested that an invitation from the Duke of Argyll would be received by such persons as equivalent to a command. According to the Shastrees such an arrangement would of itself protect those invited against all danger of losing caste. Why should not this be done at once, if possible, so that some of the evidence in question could be taken before the coming winter?

THE ADVANTAGES OF A LOCAL ENGLISH ARMY IN INDIA.

THAT Mr. Eastwick will succeed in his attempt to restore the old local European army in India, is more perhaps than we can venture to hope, although we believe that a similar attempt was projected by Mr. Disraeli's Government on the eve of its retirement from office. Too many interests we fear will be found arrayed against a measure recommended alike by past experience and by the patent difficulties in the way of Mr. Cardwell's present scheme. Nevertheless, we are sure that Mr. Eastwick will carry with him the best wishes of all who regard the question with special reference to the well-being of our Indian Empire. Which on the whole is best suited to that end, a permanent British army for special Indian service, or an army always changing, always liable to be drawn upon for service elsewhere, and of which a large fraction will every year be sailing to and fro at a heavy expense to the Indian Govern me?

We have already exposed the falsity of the assumption, so far as facts go, that a local British Army is apt to be less loyal or worse disciplined than a British garrison furnished by the War Office. But popular fallacies are hard of killing, and these two when the question comes on for Parliamentary handling, will no doubt rear their heads as loftily as ever in Mr. Eastwick's face. We can only hope that he will take care to proclaim the truth, of which ample evidence must lie to his hands in the records of the Indian Government, as well as in the private papers of men like Lord Gough, Sir Charles Napier, Lord Hardinge, and other competent judges. Has not General after General of the Horse Guards Army testified in public or private to the genuine discipline, the unsurpassed soldiership, or the steadfast loyalty of this or that section of the Company's European troops? It may suit the mere martinets and the partisans of Horse Guards supremacy to run down the character of a force which never disgraced itself in the hour of trial, never flinched from the work cut out for it, nor failed to meet the most trying calls upon its courage and endurance. But Sir Charles Napier for one knew better, and was never backward in avowing his admiration for troops whom he considered equal to the finest in the world. If discipline means anything, it means that state of general efficiency which ensures from an regiment or an army the ready and thorough discharge of any duty required at its hands. Regarded in this light, the Company's Europeans stood second to no army in Europe. They would go anywhere and do anything. To the native courage and steadiness of their race they added powers of endurance not always shown by their comrades of the Royal Army. In the Punjab campaign and before Delhi, to name two instances out of many, they had fewer men on the sick-list than the "Royals" serving by their side, and were always ready to march forward when those others were brought to a standstill for want of effective men. We have no wish to revive old jealousies, but the slanders which helped to kill the old local service can only be met by an appeal to perhaps unpalatable truths. Was it in the Queen's or the Company's army—we are not speaking of the Sepoys—that an insubordinate spirit prevailed for a time under Lord Gough? Does the later history of the Company's European Army show anything to match the mutinous epidemic which has raged in India during the last two years. The true answer to both these questions is one which the advocates of a local army need not be afraid to hear.

But how about the "White Mutiny" of 1860, to which the opponents of a local army have so often pointed in support of their own views? Why, that, as we have lately shown, has no more bearing on the question at issue than the civil war in France has on the claims of Pius IX. to retain his temporal sovereignty over Rome. It is simply a wanton libel on the soldiers of the East India Company, to charge them with any share in the misconduct of a few hundred young soldiers in a regiment raised during the Mutiny. Nothing could have been less insubordinate than the bearing of the older regiments under a provocation the more outrageous because it was offered to the men who had just been foremost in saving India. How well they bore the edict which transferred them "like horses" from one master to another, is a fact that cannot be gainsaid, and the true moral to draw from the whole affair is the wisdom of treating soldiers less like cattle and more like human beings. To assume that a local army of Englishmen in India would tend to be less loyal than an army imported for a time from England is really to assume what is contrary to all experience of English nature. Among the whole Company's Europeans one feeling was always paramount. If they were enlisted in the name of the Company, they felt that for all practical purposes they had taken service under the Crown. Unlike the Prætorians of Imperial Rome, they never dreamed of higher privilege than the honour of upholding the British name. "What will they say in England?" was the master-thought which prompted them in the hour of trial, at least as strongly as it prompted their countrymen fighting at Waterloo or in the Crimea. Disloyalty was never an English trait, even when the Long Parliament levied troops against Charles I., and Washington first took the field against the soldiers of George III.

There is one strong argument in favour of a local army on which too much stress can hardly be laid. Its permanence offers a fresh guarantee for its efficiency. An army composed of troops that never leave India, if it be good for anything, must in time become better fitted for its work than the same number of troops sent out from England to serve a few years in a strange country, and then go elsewhither. While a regiment fresh from home has everything to learn, and as soon as it has learned a little has to give place to another that must go through the same process, a local regiment is always adding to its stock of useful experiences, and enlarging the foundations of its military strength. Continually recruited, it grows up still the same, never losing the character it has once earned for itself, through all the changes that may take place in its outer being. It soon displays a kind of traditional spirit, which serves at once as the test and standard of its military prowess, enabling it to do and bear what a regiment newer to the same work would deem hardly practicable. And this spirit pervaded the whole of the Company's European Army in a very marked degree. The younger regiments emulated the older, and the fruits of that generous rivalry were always visible at the right moment. "Now, boys," said Lord Gough, before Chillianwalla, to the men of the 2nd Europeans, "remember your comrades of the 1st Europeans!" and history shows how they acted on the hint. Such regiments knew what had been done in Indian warfare, and prided themselves on doing, if possible, yet better. Their general knowledge of the country and the people likewise served them well in many ways, as compared with regiments unused to both. It was something also to be led by officers who knew their men from years of common service in cantonments and the field. All this unfortunately has passed away with the abolition of a local army, and even if the old system were now to be restored, it would take years to bring about a similar state of things. Would not the issue however of such a change be worth the waiting for?

Correspondence.

RUSSIAN INVASION OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

[The following concludes the extract quoted by our correspondent last week.—Ed. A. I. M.]

March of the Combined Army from Astrabad to the Banks of the Indus. Measures necessary to secure the Success of the Expedition.

Before the debarkation of the Russians at Astrabad commissaries will be deputed by both Governments, with the object of notifying to all the Khans and small despots of the countries the combined armies will traverse—"That an army of the two most powerful nations of the world is about to cross their country on its way to India; that the sole object of the expedition is to expel from Hindostan the conquerors, who have enslaved that country, once so powerful, so celebrated, and so rich in its natural and industrial products, which formerly attracted the people of the whole world to share in the gifts with which it had pleased Heaven to bless it; that the horrible state of oppression, the miserable condition, in fact, the slavery, to which the people of that country have of late been subjected had excited the most lively interest in France and Russia, and that in consequence these two Governments had resolved to unite their forces with the view of liberating India from the tyrannical, barbarous yoke of the English; that the princes and people of the countries through which the combined armies would march need be under no apprehension; on the contrary, they are invited to cooperate in any way in securing the success of this useful and glorious enterprise; that this expedition was as just in its objects as was unjust that of Alexander, who desired to subjugate the entire world; that the combined army will levy no contributions, will in ready money pay for everything required for its subsistence, as it moves onward; that the most strict discipline will be maintained; that the religion, the laws, manners, customs, property, women, &c., shall be everywhere respected," &c., &c.

By issuing such a proclamation, and treating the people with frank and loyal consideration, there is no doubt the Khans and minor chiefs will allow a free passage through their States, while, divided as they are amongst themselves, they are not in a position to offer any effectual resistance.

The French and Russian commissaries will be accompanied by experienced engineers, who will prepare topographical maps of the country through which the army will have to march. On these maps they will carefully note the locations for carriages, the rivers that will have to be crossed, the towns by which the army would have to pass, the points where the progress of baggage, artillery, and war material would be difficult, and the means to be used to overcome these obstacles.

These commissaries will negotiate with the khans, princes, and proprietors for the supply of food, carriage, &c., will sign treaties, will demand and secure hostages.

When the first French division arrives at Astrabad, the first Russian division will commence its march; the other divisions of the combined army will follow successively at distances of from four to six leagues, keeping up this communication with each other by small detachments of Cossacks.

A body of four thousand or five thousand Cossacks, supported by light cavalry of the regular troops, will form the advanced guard; this always to be closely followed by the pontoons. This advanced guard will throw bridges over the rivers, will defend their approaches, and protect the army against treachery or any other danger.

The French Government will commit to the charge of the commander-in-chief of the army arms manufactured at Versailles, such as guns, carbines, pistols, swords, &c.; vases and other porcelain articles manufactured at Sevres; watches and clocks from the best hands at Paris; handsome mirrors; the best broadcloths of France, of different colours, such as scarlet, purple, green, and blue, which are the favourite colours of the Asiatics, especially of the Persians; gold lace and silks of Lyons; Gobelin tapestry, &c.

All these articles, distributed amongst the princes of the country, and presented with that courtesy and amiability so natural to Frenchmen, will tend to give these people the highest idea of the munificence, the industry, and the power of the French nation, and lay the foundation of a future commercial intercourse of importance.

A select body of men of science, and of artists of all classes, should form part of this glorious expedition. The Government will entrust to them all the plans and maps of the provinces to be traversed by the combined army, as also all works, memoirs, &c., relating thereto.

Æronauts and artificers would be very useful.

To inspire the people with the highest ideas of France and of Russia, it will be desirable, before the army and the head-quarters quit Astrabad, to give some brilliant entertainments in that town, accompanied by military displays, such as on the occasions of celebrating in Paris some great events, or some remarkable epochs.

Everything being thus provided for, there is no doubt that the undertaking must succeed; but its success will depend on the intelligence, the zeal, the valour, and the fidelity of the commander to whom the two Governments will entrust the execution of the plan.

As soon as the combined army shall have reached the banks of the Indus military operations will commence.

It is to be observed that the European coinage more generally sought after, and more readily current in Persia and India, is that of Venetian sequins, Dutch and Hungarian ducats, and Russian imperials and roubles.*

THE BOMBAY FEAST-TAX.

Public Opinion observes that the discussions on the feast-tax, which have appeared in the press during the course of the week, have hardly thrown any light on the subject, so as to affect the question of the unsuitability of the measure. On the contrary, new facts and new arguments have been advanced which only go further in the condemnation which it had deservedly met with. Almost all the vernacular papers, Marathi and Gujarathi, disapprove of the impost, as Government must have learned, or will shortly learn from the official reports. A local Gujarathi journal and a Parsee writer, however, have come forward to support the proposed tax. Their own productions are brimful of matter proving the Cockneyism of their lucubrations. Bombay is not the Bombay Presidency. Nor are the burra khanas with sparkling champagne the just measure of the country's status and prospects. Since we wrote our last we have received a long communication from a Parsee gentleman in favour of our views, which we cannot give entire for want of space. It is not a question of expediency, but a question of fundamental principles. The British Government should for our sake and the sake of the whole Empire never think of interfering in the remotest degree with our religious and social observances, unless when these interfere injuriously with the rights of others. Writers who have no argument, but mere tall rhodomontade, are not the safe counsellors for this Empire. If the State taxes luxuries like tamashas, baithaks, nautches, nataks, and noisy tomtoms, it may well do so; and its action will in that case have the sanction of precedent, as well as of popular approbation. For all these things are luxuries, which the so-called feasts are not. We gave some examples of necessary dinners on the last occasion; they could be multiplied to any extent. Every village in the Konkan, or many parts of the Dekkan, has the local deity's festival. This is celebrated by a dinner. But what is the dinner? Rice and vegetables are collected from peoples' houses by a few individuals going from door to door. Leaves are set forth in rows, and children and adults congregate to enjoy the annual repast. There are no hip hip hurras; and neither liquor, nor flesh, nor sugar, nor much ghee, nor other costly food. And Cockney writers who write up a feast-tax had better take a run amongst the langotivalas in the country before they again take up their pens. Funeral ceremonies, too, are accompanied with compulsory dinner. On the thirteenth day, certain relatives and others make it their duty to attend uninvited, and often in large numbers. Is the magistrate to be notified and propitiated with a ten rupee offering on every such occasion? Again, native invitations are given to each householder "sahakuttumba sahaparivara," &c, &c.

THE BOMBAY ARTILLERY.

The Bombay Gazette points out that when the Albertine Amalgamation was effected the old Royal Artillery consisted of one brigade of Horse Artillery of ten batteries, and fifteen brigades of Field and Garrison Artillery. Several of these brigades were young, having been raised for service in the Crimea, whilst many of the Indian Artillery had been in existence for upwards of a century, and had on their appointments names of battles fought by them upwards of sixty years before. No consideration was given to this long service when amalgamation came, but the old Royal Horse Artillery was made the 1st brigade of R.H.A., and the fifteen brigades of Field and Garrison Artillery were numbered from No. 1 to No. 15 Brigade R.A. The Indian brigades were then numbered 1st Bengal H.A., No. 2 Brigade R.H.A.; Madras H.A., No. 3 Brigade R.H.A.; Bombay H.A., No. 4 Brigade R.H.A.; 2nd Bengal H.A., No. 5 Brigade R.H.A.; and the ten brigades of Indian Artillery numbered from 16th to 25th Brigades R.A. This numbering continued until April, 1864, when it was found necessary, for the sake of appearances, to send a brigade of old Indian Horse Artillery home and replace it in India by one of the old R.H.A. from England. It was difficult to carry this out without dividing the ten batteries of old Royal Horse Artillery into two brigades, which was accordingly ordered, and an augmentation of field officers and staff for it given to the old Royals. There was still another great difficulty to be overcome. How was this second brigade of old Horse Artillery to be kept senior to the old Indian brigades numbered already 2, 3, 4, and 5? The object was to keep this second brigade senior to the Indian, so as not to be liable to reduction hereafter, as, according to all rule, the juniors and youngest brigades should be first absorbed. It was at last determined to "letter" the brigades of Horse Artillery to meet this difficulty, so an order was issued making—

* The silver coinage that now forms the best price in India is the Netherlands Dollar, known in the Umritsur markets as the "Tippoo Shahee Rupee."

1st half of old R. H.A.,	5th battery,	the	A	brigade	R.H.A.
2nd do.	do.	do.	B	,,	,,
1st Bengal—old No. 2	...	...	...	C	,,	,,
Madras ,,	3	...	...	...	D	,,	,,
Bombay ,,	4	...	...	...	E	,,	,,
2nd Bengal ,,	5	...	...	...	F	,,	,,

Thus the Indian Horse Artillery were put back a step, and the newly-created brigade was brought in as senior instead of junior. As the artilleries had been amalgamated and made one years before, it should have been the F Brigade. In due course orders for reductions came, and the old Royal brigades were sent to India, and received the batteries hitherto held by the old Indians, who, from the numbering of their brigades, were looked on as being junior and first to go, although in reality they were older brigades by many years than those relieving them. In this way the B-21, a battery raised more than a century, was reduced to make room for a battery of the 14th Brigade raised for the Crimea, and the E-18th had to give place to the G-14, returned from China. The process has been continued, the Indian Artillery in every instance being sacrificed to the old Royal, until the Bombay Artillery now finds itself in 1871 with six light field batteries only. In February, 1871, a telegram was received from England ordering two batteries of the E Brigade (Bombay), two batteries of D Brigade (Madras), and the sixth battery of the C Brigade (Bengal, which last had been left in India as surplus to home establishment when its own brigade went to England in 1865) to embark from Bombay for service in England. Accordingly, on 2nd March last they left with one Lieut Colonel of the E Brigade and two Lieut-Colonels of Field Artillery from Bengal and Madras. The object of this move was unknown, but in due course came intimation that an increase of six batteries of Horse Artillery was to be made to the force at home, and that this was to be carried out by transferring these five Indian batteries to the B and C Brigades and adding an extra battery (to be raised by old Royal Artillery) to the B Brigade. Now mark what follows. The two D, or Madras batteries, were added to the B Brigade—the corps we have just seen pitchforked into a position of seniority—but no field officer was taken with the batteries on transfer! No doubt the other batteries will be similarly disposed of, since the Woolwich list of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, dated February 1, 1871, shows that one object of the augmentation is the reduction of the old Indian Horse Artillery brigades. The E brigade is reduced altogether—two batteries are transferred to the C brigade at home, and two to the D brigade in Madras in place of two sent home to join the B brigade. With the exception of the officer sent home with the two E brigade batteries, the whole of the field officers are entered as "supernumerary, late E brigade R.H.A. to be absorbed" —in other words, they are all shelved for the benefit of their juniors —no wonder the Horse Guards, when convenient, distrusts its own ability to act fairly. This is an example of selection with a vengeance. But there is no selection in the case, no exercise of judgment; the Horse Guards is simply grinding up the Indian Artillery officers in order to perfect the system! Thus Colonel Fuller, who is senior to all Horse Artillery colonels serving at home and in India, save three, has the honour by the working of the Horse Guards machine to find himself a supernumerary, and his batteries transferred to the D brigade commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Cadell, a junior Royal Artillery colonel. Had Colonel Fuller been a Royal officer would this have happened? Let us look at it a little more closely. Lieut.-Colonel Tupper has been appointed, on augmentation, to the B brigade, whilst his seniors of Madras, Molesworth, Grant, and Couchman, are kept in India; consequence, no lieut.-colonel of the E brigade is transferred to the D brigade with the two batteries, because it is already complete in lieut.-colonels; so that Lieut.-Colonels Brown and Shckelton, senior to Tupper, are made supernumerary to be absorbed expressly to allow their junior to be appointed to the Horse Artillery. But we are not astonished. The Horse Guards has never forgotten that, when there were failures in the Crimea, people would point to India, and the smashing up of the old Indian army, with all its soldierly traditions, was decreed, and has been unfalteringly executed by the Duke of Cambridge, as far as Parliament would permit.

THE COMMISSARIAT SCANDAL AT PESHAWUR.

The following picture of what often takes place in the Public Works Department is taken from a letter in the Englishman:—

I am a commissariat gomashta, and have served the Government during the last twenty-five years; and, if you are not startled again, I should say that I served the Government honestly. I was station gomashta at ——, where there were cantoned some three thousand European and about two thousand native troops. I had charge of the bakery and the supply of grain and fodder to all the commissariat cattle; had to entertain, control, and pay up a good number of dooly bearers, khalassies, beldars, &c. In addition to all these, I had to do the duties of a treasurer, as also that of an office moonshee. Now, to carry on all these multifarious duties efficiently I had to keep up an establishment of moonshees, peons, and weighmen, at my own expense, which generally exceeded a hundred rupees per month. My monthly supplies of grain and fodder amounted to about Rs. 40,000 per month, which I was expected to purchase by my own money on credit, for Government would not advance a pice, notwithstanding my security deposit of Rs. 3,000, which I had to furnish on my appointment. My bills were generally audited and paid by the executive officer about the 20th of the month following. What do you think was my remuneration for all these? Rs. 50!!! My bills were checked by the prices current in the bazaar, obtained from the cantonment magistrate or the deputy commissioner, so that there was no loophole here left for me to escape from this apparent loot by Government, though, on the voluntary principle, you would then distend your eyes, and ask me how is it that people should tear each other to enter into so losing a concern. The reasons are these. Somehow, it is necessary that I should live, and live up to my position. Being born of a respectable family, I cannot enter into the army as a private, for you have left no room there for us. A few posts of honour and emolument have been opened in the civil line of late, it is true; but those are for picked men, and far beyond the ambition and qualifications of a poor gentleman's son like me. My father died when I was very young. A large family had to be provided for. I picked up a little Persian in my native village, and when I began to look about me I saw that I was fit for nothing, and trade was not in my line, but Government service was; but service that was open to us at the time was as degrading as the profession of a petty dealer in piece-goods. From this dilemma I was delivered by an old friend of my family, who understood well the mysteries of the gomashta craft, and who initiated me into it. The first principle inculcated by him was to ingratiate myself into the good graces of every white face with whom I might come in contact, be he sergeant, conductor, or a commissioned officer; and to do this it was necessary that I should not only require a small capital (for money is all-mighty, to use an Americanism again), but temper, tact, and time. The second was, that the more I was insulted and abused, the more it would tell in favour of my pocket; and the third was, that when I should have accumulated enough of money, and to spare, I should lend to all needy Europeans, of whom there are many in your army; and, as the commissariat has dealings with all and everybody in a cantonment, and as it is in the power of everyone, from a regimental cook to the all-powerful quartermaster, I should always keep a few thousand rupees floating on loans to them, and also keep up a few horses and carriages for the convenience of the gentlemen. In short, a model station gomashta must try to be everything to everybody in the station. I carried out all these instructions of my old friend to the letter, and prospered; but do not think that all the money that I so laboriously and honestly gained went to the credit side of my account; for there were heavy items on the other side too. On the whole, I prospered, and allowed others to prosper. I myself have often wondered how a clever people, like the English, could be so senseless as not to understand that a man upon whom the real burden of the department was laid could not be remunerated by a nominal pay. Then it occurred to me that, on the whole, what was was right; for the plan was advantageous to Government. To pay adequately a station gomashta it cannot, for it will then exceed the high rates of salary paid to their European officers, nor are the Europeans, from their position in India, capable of undertaking the work into their own hands; for if the work be placed in the hands of Europeans, the probability is that the scandal will assume gigantic proportions in a short time; not that they will stoop to all the nastiness that a native gomashta is obliged to practice, but the nature of the work is such that a European will have to delegate it to his khansamah or khitmutgar, if no understrappers are allowed to him by Government. I say, then, abolish the gomashta plant by all means if you can, but is there a wise head in all British India who can devise a scheme by which the duties of a commissariat station gomashta can be carried on with honesty, and consequently with advantage to Government? I trow not.

The real state of affairs is well known to all the commissariat officers and to Government, but they have not the time or inclination to grapple with the evil. Every department has been reformed or remodelled, but this department remains in the same state as it stood in the days of Hastings and Bentinck. General Macpherson essayed to reform it, but the monster of a financial deficit put a stop to all his good intentions. Colonel Willes is too busy with his measures of retrenchment to think of the real weakness of his department.

21st March, 1871. CHOKHEH LALL.

STATION TALK.

JUBBULPORE, April—.—The Mohurrum has gone off here with fighting and wounding; but the case has been hushed up. Not at all wonderful. With money I would guarantee to hush up any case at Jubbulpore. If you were to tell the authorities that there is a high native official here who officiously interferes in such cases where money can be squeezed out, they would ask you to prove it. That might be done, if one could depend on even two plucky native witnesses. Things were not so when Captain Ward was Deputy Commissioner. He removed the screen that hung between him and the public, and his incumbency was marked with sound, healthy, vigorous measures of reform in the courts. It was only the other day that a police inspector got into trouble, and down came a messenger on him to say that if he would launch out so many hundreds, the —— sahib would make everything square for him with the magistrate. That sahib was a native officer. The inspector asked his pleader, who, being a European, told him to do no such thing. When the case came on a great deal of officiousness was manifested in one quarter, and the accused came to grief; then he turned on his pleader and said, "You see, if I had given the bribe I should have got off!" This is just the sort of case that Mr. Pritchard would have liked to have got a hold of for his "Chronicles of Budgepore." You may hear more of this case by-and-bye. Meanwhile, I will add what I conscientiously believe in, that nothing short of a transfer of one or two native civil officials will set the judicial administration of the place right. The remedy is in Colonel Keating's hand, and if he possesses half the energy and common sense that he is credited with he should not put off the transfer. The greatest wonder to me is that a district officer of Mr. Chisholm's calibre should fail to do what is necessary. No one who knows him could believe that Mr. Chisholm does not know who the native at Jabulpur is who rules the kingdom of corruption. The present Deputy Commissioner feels hesitation in acting without a complaint; but he may be sure that the enemy is too powerful to fear a complaint. If he can shut up the mouths of complainants against others he would do the same with complainants against himself. Nothing but Sir R. Temple's remedy of transfer will meet the case.—Correspondent Delhi Gazette.

Miscellaneous.

CIVIL.—General Barrow is said to be about to proceed to England. During his absence Sir George Couper will officiate as Chief Commissioner of Oudh.

ACCIDENT TO CAPTAIN MCNAIR.—The correspondent of a contemporary, writing from Delhi on the 10th April, says:—"I am sorry to say that an accident occurred to Captain McNair on Sunday evening. He was driving in a buggy, when from some cause or other the horse became restive, and ran away. Somehow or other the occupant of the buggy was thrown out, and was found lying insensible on the road, but the horse continued his mad career, knocking down some natives, more than one of whom have, I hear, since died from the injuries received."

THE EX-KING OF OUDH.—"There is," says the Indian Mirror, "trouble in store for the Indian tax-payer. Some one has put it into the wise head of that eminently wise and valiant sovereign, Wajid Ali Shah, King of Oudh, that the British Government owes him somewhere between thirty and forty lakhs of rupees, and he has made up his mind to prosecute his claim by an appeal, if necessary, to England. Poor man! He only wants it to buy a few more pigeons and antelopes, to contract a few more marriages, and build a few more houses in that rabbit-warren of his at Garden Reach."

POSTAL RATES.—The Director-General of Indian Post-offices proposes a reduction of the postage-rate on newspapers of half an anna for the same weight as at present, viz., ten tolas. The condition annexed to this concession is that, in order to benefit by it newspapers must be registered by the Postmaster-General of the province of issue and that each copy must bear on the outside of its cover the number under which it is so registered, and the reduction will apply only to copies of newspapers posted at the station of publication, i.e., papers re-posted will have to pay, as at present, one anna. Mr. Monteath also contemplates allowing trade circulars, prices-current, &c., up to the weight of five tolas, to travel like newspapers by the letter-post for half an anna. These changes require, of course, the approval of the Supreme Government, to whom they have been suggested.

THE RAJAH OF CASHMERE.—The Viceroy has been pleased to exonerate His Highness the Maharajah of Cashmere from all complicity, direct or indirect, in the murder of Mr. Hayward.

THE VICEROY AT CAWNPORE.—The Viceroy seems to have had a busy time of it at Cawnpore. On Saturday morning, the 8th April, his Excellency drove to the new bridge over the Ganges, and spent more than an hour in inspecting the bridge-works. In the evening he visited the well, memorial gardens, canal, &c. Sunday was devoted to attendance at church and a visit to the model farm. On Monday morning he went out some eighteen miles pig-sticking, and had several good runs, though there were no pigs realised, owing to the heavy grass. His Lordship breakfasted with the Tent Club, and then returned by 2 P.M. to Cawnpore, where business required his presence. On Tuesday morning his lordship visited the city, inspected the drainage works and stone tramway, the new flour mills, Mr. Crowe's oil mills and ice machines, finishing up with a visit to the tanneries.

REDUCTIONS IN THE DELHI RAILWAY.—Indian Public Opinion says:—"We regret to state that, in consequence of the unsatisfactory condition of the returns of the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railway, it has been deemed necessary, under the orders of Government, we believe, to make extensive reductions throughout the length and breadth of the line. These reductions include places, amount of salaries, working gangs, and the closing of a number of level crossings. The many Europeans that will be thrown out of employment will swell the list of the unfortunates already in that predicament. It appears to us that one month's notice, and then to be cast upon the world, will bear very hard on some of the subordinate members of the Railway Company, especially when we consider that the majority of those who will lose their situations have no status in the country in the shape of family or friends—in truth, are comparative strangers in it."

THE KHYBER PASS.—There has been a fight in the Khyber Pass between Affghan forces and the restless Khyberees. These Khyberees had reverted to their old practice of plundering and murdering, and the Ameer ordered the Governor of Jellalabad to collect a force and restore order. Horse and foot to the number of 12,000 were mustered, and in due course found themselves face to face with the Khyberees. The hillmen got the worst of it, and thousands, it is said, were placed hors de combat. Yet the Pass is not safe, and another action may be necessary to bring the Khyber chiefs to their bearings. The Khyberees solicited the help of the Akhoond of Swat, but that gentleman wisely refrained from interfering in quarrels that did not concern him. Khyberees' heads are at a premium in the Affghan army. Shah Newaz Khan and Sirdar Yacoob Khan are said to be energetically plotting mischief in Seistan.

ANOTHER FANATIC HANGED.—From Kohat we have intelligence of a murderous assault, followed up by a speedy punishment. Two sepoys of the 2nd Punjab Infantry were attacked a few days back by a fanatic, who succeeded in dangerously wounding one of them, the other escaping with minor injuries. On being arrested the fanatic described himself as an inhabitant of Teerah, a religious scholar, and hater of infidels. His "Moollah" had told him that he was certain of Paradise if he could only manage to kill a Sikh, which act would at once raise him to the dignified position of a "Ghaz." Fate, however, destined that he should be raised even higher. Sanction was requested and received from the commissioner to try the accused under Act XXIII. of 1867 (for suppression of murderous outrages in certain districts in the Punjab). He was found guilty and hanged next morning, to the immense satisfaction of all the Sikhs in the garrison.—Pioneer.

A HOT SEASON GRIEVANCE.—The Civil Service has, says the Pioneer, yet another grievance against the Government, and a memorial for signature may, we presume, be expected at an early date. It seems that orders have been published abolishing thermantidotes in cutcherries, cutting down the number of coolies to one man for every three tatties, and sanctioning only one punkah cooly per punkah for the day's work! Of course civilians will be permitted to supply themseves with any number of thermantidotes and battalions of coolies if they will pay for them themselves, but the Government declines for the future to provide more than the above. One correspondent considers that this order is an indirect attempt of the local Government to accelerate promotion, "as death by asphyxia will infallibly carry off all the stouter seniors." Another correspondent suggests that the second and third classes of the order may be safely evaded by punishing the first delinquent brought up each morning with "six hours at the punkah."

A CURE FOR LEPROSY.—Medical science seems to have triumphed over leprosy. The Civil Surgeon of Khundwa reports the case of a wretched old Jew who came to him from Bombay in great grief, saying that his friends had excluded him from their society, and obliged him to live in a hut by himself. He was at this time piebsingly mottled with rose colour. The doctor at once had him washed with soap and warm water; the old Jew got wonderfully better. He was then anointed with carbolic acid and oil, with such good effects that next day he wrote to his wife to expect him home in a week. In short, what with washing with soap and water, and what with anointing with carbolic acid and oil, the old Jew was very completely cured. The experiment had, moreover, an interest apart from the fact that an ancient scourge was being conquered—in the chameleon variations of the corpus vile under experiment. The Jew came to Khundwa rose colour and brown; in a week or two he was glossy black and brown; a little later he became speckled grey; then his cuticle—possibly wondering like Alice in Wonderland, "what will happen next"—lost all patience with the Jew, and peeled away from him, leaving him just the colour a Jew ought to be. He lives in the hut no longer.—Pioneer.

GENERAL BARROW'S ILLNESS.—On the 7th April the Chief Commissioner, General Barrow, held a durbar at the Lal Baraduree (throne-room of the kings of Oudh) at five P.M. His appearance did not then betray the least sign of unhealthiness, and much less the symptoms of any serious disorder. At ten P.M., however, while he was engaged in writing some urgent letters, he all of a sudden was prostrated by an attack of paralysis on the left side. The civil surgeon, Dr. Cannon, was at once sent for, and he immediately took the case in hand. The sad intelligence spread like wildfire all over the city. The whole body of talookdars who had come to Lucknow to attend the coming Viceregal durbar were thrown into extreme gloom and anxiety. No Englishman exercising delegated power in the province was ever so deservedly popular as General Barrow. The chiefs and people feel it as a great domestic misfortune. One seldom meets two or more natives in the streets or other places of public resort who do not speak to each other in whispers, and the subject of their talk invariably is no other than the serious indisposition of their beloved and respected Chief Commissioner, accompanied with a fervent prayer to God for his recovery. At the Kaiserbagh Palace thousands of beggars have, since the 8th inst., been, morning and evening, receiving alms in gram and pice. Your readers perhaps are not unaware that this sort of charity is always practised among the natives to avert impending calamities. Many thousands of rupees were spontaneously subscribed on the morning of the 8th inst. by the Talookdars, who, though this is the season of reaping the Rubbee crops, are waiting with intense anxiety for a favourable turn in the case of the General. Under the very able treatment of Dr. Cannon, he is slowly, though surely, progressing for the better, though all hopes, alas! of his being able to resume his duties for the next twelve months are out of the question. The utmost that his dearest friends could expect is that he may be in a fit state to be safely removed to some hill sanitarium before the setting in of the hot winds.

PRESENTATION OF COLOURS BY LADY MAYO.—On Friday, the 14th April, the Countess of Mayo presented new colours to the 65th Regiment at Agra, in the presence of the whole brigade. On the arrival of the Countess on parade she was received with a general salute by the troops under Major-General Travers, V.C. After the usual forms the old colours were removed, and the new ones placed on the drums piled in front of the centre of the regiment. They were then unfurled by the Majors of the corps. The Countess alighted from her carriage and stood a few paces in front of them, while they were being consecrated by the Chaplain of the station. They were then handed in succession by the Majors to Lady Mayo, who presented them to the Ensigns, who received them kneeling. The Countess then spoke as follows:—"Colonel MacGregor, officers, non-commissioned officers and men, 65th Regiment. I esteem it a great honour to present you with these colours to replace those under which you have long served with credit and distinction. These colours are the emblems of loyalty to your Queen, of devotion to your country, and of adherence to duty. To stand by his Colours is the motto of every British soldier, and I know that in now presenting these banners to the gallant 65th I give them into the keeping of men who will follow them wherever duty and honour leads—into the hands of soldiers who will never yield. I feel sure that they will wave over the heads of men whose conduct in peace and whose courage in war will ever bring credit to the British name." Colonel MacGregor returned thanks for the honour conferred on the regiment under his command, and, turning to the regiment, reminded them of their duty as true, brave, and loyal soldiers of England. Places were then taken for the march past in review order. That over, the final general salute was given, the band playing the National Anthem, her Ladyship drove away, the regiments marched to their lines, and the large concourse of people dispersed. The same evening the officers of the 65th gave a grand ball, at which the Countess of Mayo attended, and on Saturday night the Taj was splendidly illuminated, while thousands of lights were floated down the river. On the morning of the 18th her Excellency visited Futtehpore Sikri, returning to Agra the same evening.

THE VICEROY AT LUCKNOW.—His Excellency the Viceroy left Cawnpore at 3.30 A.M. on Wednesday morning (12th), accompanied by Major Burne and Captains Grant and De Robeck, aide-de-camps, and arrived in Lucknow at 5.30, where he was met by the leading civil and military authorities. The visit being strictly of an unofficial character, the usual guards of honour and salutes were dispensed with. The Viceroy drove direct through the native city to the Muchee Bawun, where he was met by Colonel Burne, Military Secretary to the Government of India, Colonel Maxwell, R.E., and Captain Pemberton, R.E. His Excellency spent upwards of an hour inspecting everything minutely, with a view, as we learn from the Pioneer, to deciding whether the fort might advantageously be abandoned. The Residency was then visited, Sir G. Couper and Dr. Fayrer pointing out the various places of interest. Proceeding thence the Viceroy visited the new hospital, which has been erected and furnished by the Maharajah of Bulrampore at a cost of £10,000, and expressed himself warmly on the subject of the Maharajah's munificence. Having visited then the Secundra Bagh and the remaining historical scenes, His Excellency returned home, received a number of people, and prepared to start for Seetapore. It is thought, says the Pioneer, that the Fort of Muchee Bawun will after all be preserved. "Of course judged critically as a fortification it is contemptible; but there is prestige about it; it is in a most commanding position, and against any native force may be considered impregnable." General Barrow was not allowed to know that Lord Mayo had been in Lucknow until he had already left it. We are glad to learn that General Barrow continued to improve, though of course he must still be looked upon as seriously ill. By the Lucknow paper we are told that the Viceroy and suite would proceed on their hunting expedition to the Nepal Terai via Lucknow and Seetapore. From the latter station Colonel Thompson, Commissioner of the Division, would accompany his Excellency on behalf of the Oudh Commission, and his Highness Maharajah Sir Dirgbejoy Singh, K.C.S.I., on that of the Talookdars. His Highness the Maharajah of Vizianagram provided, it is said, the splendid carriage and relays of horses used by his Excellency the Viceroy on the journey from Dehree to Mogul Serai—a distance of about eighty miles.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, April 19.—The transactions since last week have been extremely small, the market being much depressed.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, April 19.—SALTPETRE: Owing to news of better prices in Europe, there has been rather an active demand for Saltpetre at slightly higher rates, with a tendency to a still further rise. The stock in hand consists of about 5,000 bags. RICE: The supplies having been small, prices have somewhat hardened, and we quote fine table Rs. 3-2 to 3-4, and middling Rs. 2-9 to 2-10. LINSEED: There has been a fair demand for Great Britain; for immediate delivery we quote bold, 3 per cent., Rs. 4-5 to 4-6; and medium, Rs. 4-2 to 4-3. RAPESEED has continued in good demand for Great Britain; prices are unaltered, and stand for yellow, 4 per cent. admixture, Rs. 4-9 to 4-10. TEELSEED: The stock is very small, and but little is likely to come into the market for some months. RAW SILK: What little business has been transacted during the week has been at a fall of 3 annas, but buyers still stand out for better terms. Some bales of middling Jungypore of the March bund have been sold at Rs. 16-8, and the prospects of this bund are still favourably reported upon, especially from the Northern districts. CORAHS: There has been no disposition on the part of holders to accept lower prices, and, consequently, buyers have been unable to come into the market, though the stocks are heavy.

LAWYERS IN RANGOON.—Advocates in Rangoon may well be termed "enterprising townsmen." Only the other day a pilot was called to the bar, and now we read that "Mr. G. Dawson, the advocate, has entered into some heavy contracts, to supply the King with machinery, &c. He is fitting up a steam-flat, belonging to the King, which is lying opposite the main wharf, with the machinery belonging to some steamer, and has taken up the patent slip he had at Moulmein, and sent it on to Mandalay."

THE TINNEVELLY D.P.W. SCANDALS.—We learn by telegraph that Sub-Engineer Adam Colquhoun, who was last week found guilty of fraud, bribery, and falsification of accounts, has been sentenced by Mr. F. S. Child, Sessions Judge of Tinnevelly, to five years' rigorous imprisonment, and a fine of Rs. 25,000. Ragavachari, the contractor, who was also found guilty of the same offences, has been sentenced to two years' simple imprisonment, and Rs. 25,000 fine. The prisoners, it is believed, will appeal in the High Court against the verdict of the Assessors.—Madras Mail, April 13.

DEATH OF DR. MACPHERSON.—We regret to learn of the death, at Madras, on the morning of the 14th April, of Assistant-Surgeon John Macpherson, M.D., 38th N.I. Dr. Macpherson was, to all appearance, in excellent health the previous day, and purposed leaving Madras on the morning on which he died, to join his regiment at Trichinopoly. He was a native of Huntly, in Aberdeenshire, and was educated in Keith and Aberdeen. He entered the local Medical Department in March, 1866, and returned with his regiment from Rangoon in February last. A funeral party consisting of forty rank and file and twelve under-bearers, and the band from H.M.'s 45th Foot, under command of a Lieutenant, escorted the remains of the deceased officer to Saint Andrew's burial-ground.

A WORD FOR COLONEL KENNEDY.—We have had our say about Colonel Kennedy, of the 3rd-60th Rifles, and an "Old Soldier" now "claims the privilege of having the last word" on behalf of that officer. Our correspondent, who is in a favourable position to know the state of feeling in the corps, observes:—"Colonel Kennedy gave up the command last week, but I cannot endorse your statement that he left behind an 'unenviable reputation.' With a section of the officers, and with the Madras public, instructed by the press, no doubt he did; but with the battalion generally, in which he had served so many years, and which he has brought to a pitch of training it never possessed before, such is not the case. I refer more particularly to the soldiers, among whom he will always be remembered as one who, with all his faults, ever had the good of the service at heart, and worked hard for it; as one who, however unnecessarily, in their opinion he marched, drilled, or instructed his men, or however heedlessly or tediously he looked into or ventilated matters, yet never was known to spare himself, but worked harder than them all; and above all, as one who knew the soldiers' character well, and was ever ready to give a patient hearing, and stern but even justice, and no favour to the lowest as well as the highest under his command. Old soldiers, Sir, learn to value these qualities in a commanding officer, and in consideration of them are content to overlook those faults of manner to which the Colonel has fallen a victim with his officers; and I know I speak the sentiments of every well-conditioned soldier in the battalion, yes, and of many bad ones too, when I say that the feelings with which they regard his removal from the command are those of sincere sympathy and sorrow that such a misfortune should have overtaken him after thirty years' of such zealous service as few men have given to her Majesty."—Madras Mail.

Bombay.

POLITICAL AGENTS.—Major E. C. Ross has been appointed Political Agent at Muscat, and Major A. C. Way to act as Political Agent at Zanzibar.

THE GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY.—His Excellency the Governor arrived from Kattywar about five o'clock on Thursday afternoon, April 20, and landed from the May Frere at Malabar Point. His Excellency, we learn, bagged one lion, Captain Strauhenzie a second, and Captain Jervoise a third, whilst Dr. Bruce wounded a fourth.

COOLING RAILWAY CARRIAGES.—The Englishman speaks highly of the success of the railway carriage cooling process invented by Mr. Saunders, of the G.I.P. Railway. Our contemporary concludes:—"As the cost of fitting a carriage with Mr. Saunders's system is only Rs 250, there can be no excuse for not applying it to a first and second-class carriages; and we should also advocate its extension to a certain proportion of third-class carriages with each train, the fare for which might be raised ten per cent. above that for the ordinary vehicles".

THE FEAST-TAX.—The Hon. Mr. Strachey denounces the duties on "Europe stores" as a class-tax on British residents. The Government of Bombay have introduced a Bill to tax caste feasts, that is, all native feasts where more than 100 dine together. We doubt whether this last tax will yield very much. Will not our native friends dine by hundreds less one? Why not tax the burra khanas, the champagne dinners on Malabar Hill? After all, is there any better way of taxing "Dives" (whether Asiatic or European) than by imposing a good round duty on certain "Europe stores," that are doing very much to stay the march of true civilisation? We believe that society in India would really be the better by a tax of 33⅓ per cent. on spirits and wines, and many would be relieved of onerous taxation.—Bombay Guardian, April 15.

MR. W. SEWARD.—The Hon. W. H. Seward, who arrived at Bombay a fortnight ago, and has this week paid a flying visit to Goa, was entertained at dinner by the members of the Byculla Club, Bombay, on Thursday night. Nearly a hundred gentlemen were present, and the Hon. the Chief Justice occupied the chair. The Hon. Mr. Tucker, in the course of the evening, expressed the regret of H. E. the Governor at being unable to attend. (Sir Seymour Fitzgerald had just that evening returned from hunting lions in Kattywar, where he had good sport.) A telling speech was made by the Chairman in proposing the health of the illustrious guest, and Mr. Seward replied in an eloquent address, expressing his thanks to the authorities of the various parts of Asia which he had visited for their kind welcomes, and at the same time addressing a few words of farewell. Mr. Seward (who leaves by to-day's steamer for Egypt and Europe) has been received with great attention and honour at the many places he has visited in India, and he seems to have enjoyed his tour and turned it to the best account.—Bombay Gazette, April 22.

A FEAT IN TELEGRAPHY.—On Easter Sunday a few experiments were tried in direct working between Kurrachee and London. Considering the distance between the two places, and the fact of the current having to traverse two submarine cables en route, the result, we believe, surpassed anything hitherto attempted. For the first time a message was sent from India to England instantaneously. By the Indo-European line communication is now carried on easily and quickly direct with London. A paid message from Dundee to Calcutta has been thus received at Kurrachee. There was not a hitch of any kind in the experiment above mentioned. The signals came distinctly and regularly, and as fast as if the telegraphist were working with Jashk. There are practical objections, which every telegraphist understands, to such extraordinary long circuits for everyday business; but as an experiment, the above is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable on record, and proves at least the perfect insulation of the wire throughout. In bad weather such a result would be unattainable. —Bombay Gazette.

THE KHANDEISH ACCUSATIONS.—At the Appellate Side of the High Court, before Mr. Justice Lloyd and Mr. Justice Kemball, Mr. Macpherson, instructed by Mr. Dhondoo S. Garud, moved that the record and proceedings in this case, held before Mr. A. C. Watt, Sessions Judge of Khandeish, be sent for under section 404 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The application was based chiefly on the ground that the sanction to prosecute a public servant, as required by section 167 of the Criminal Procedure Code, was wanting in the case. Government had sanctioned the prosecution on such charges as Mr. Campbell might prefer; but this gentleman soon after withdrew from the prosecution, which was then taken up by Mr. Cassinath Mahaneo Thathe, a subordinate of Mr. Venayek Dewaker. The High Court were of opinion that the point as to the Government sanction was arguable, and therefore ordered the record and proceedings to be sent for. On Mr. Macpherson's application, it was further ordered that the prisoner should be, meanwhile, released on bail, the amount of bail being left at the discretion of the Sessions Judge.

EARTHQUAKE AT SEA.—We are indebted to Captain Cosens, of the ship Enterpe, for the following notes of his voyage from Newport to Bombay. The experience of an earthquake at sea is sufficiently novel to attract special notice:—Dec. 11, 1870.—Sailed from Newport, Jan. 11, 1871, crossed the Equator, in lon. 21 deg. W. Feb. 8.—Rounded the Cape of Good Hope in lat. 43 deg. S. March 18.—Crossed the Equator in lon. 67 deg. E. In the Channel had strong westerly gale; from thence to Bombay very fine weather, never having reefed a topsail or stowed the main-top-gallant sail. Lost the S.E. trade on March 6 in lat 14 deg. S. lon. 64 deg. E, from which time had nothing but light northerly winds and calms. March 23 in lat. 3 deg. N., lon. 66 deg. 30 min. E. experienced two slight shocks of earthquake, the ship having a tremulous motion, as though grinding over a rough hard bottom. There was an interval of about ten minutes between the shocks, each shock lasting from six to ten seconds. The wind at the time was north-easterly, light, with fine, serene weather, and smooth seas. No sign of a shoal or shoal water.—Times of India.

THE MUGGUR PEER MURDER.—The result of the deliberations of the court of enquiry held to investigate the charges against the three soldiers, of murder and robbery, committed last month on the Muggur Peer road, is, that the identity of the men could not be established; a report was submitted to the Commander-in Chief of the Bombay army, who has forwarded instructions to the accused to be handed over to the civil powers; accordingly, the men who were in confinement in the Quarter Guard of their regiment were sent to the district jail on Wednesday last—their names are Walker, Harrington, and Harvey, privates of H.M.'s 66th, stationed here. They were arraigned before the city magistrate on the following day, with the view to a preliminary investigation being held. A few witnesses for the prosecution were examined, and it appears that their testimony was somewhat conflicting. The magistrate has summoned the sergeant-major of the regiment to whom the three soldiers were taken on the evening the murder is alleged to have been committed. The sergeant-major's evidence will, no doubt, form a very material part of the evidence for the prosecution; and as the case comes on for hearing at eleven o'clock to-day, it will be known whether sufficient ground exists for committing the accused to the High Court of Bombay. The general impression is that Mr. Gibbons should not have committed the three gharreewallas, who are now in custody, to the Sessions Court, till the preliminary enquiry into the charges against the soldiers had been settled.—Sindian.

DEPARTURE OF H.M.'S I.T.S. "EUPHRATES."—H.M.'s I.T.S. Euphrates, Captain C. T. Curme, left here for England on the 20th inst. via the Suez Canal. She took with her a large number of troops, details from different regiments. A few days since the Euphrates was inspected by his Excellency Rear-Admiral Cockburn, who expressed himself highly pleased at the state of the ship, and warmly complimented Captain Curme, Lieutenant Warren, and the officers generally upon her cleanliness and discipline. The Euphrates may be expected at Portsmouth in five weeks, and will remain there until the end of next September, when she will return to Bombay. An unfortunate occurrence took place on board the night before the ship sailed. An insane soldier managed to elude the watchfulness of his keeper, and obtaining a razor by some means, cut his throat from ear to ear.—Times of India, April 22. The Euphrates had on board 400 invalids, 50 time-expired men, 55 women, 95 children, and the following officers:—

PROMOTION OF JUNIOR CIVILIANS.

Read the following papers:—

Notification, No. 4,001, dated Oct. 13, 1853. Notification, No. 4,273A of Oct. 10, 1870.

Observations.—In the notification first quoted it was laid down that no Covenanted Junior Civil Servant would be promoted until he had passed the examination prescribed for such officers, and that promotion would be usually made according to the order of passing.

2. The Central Examination Committee, which assembled in 1870, in reporting the results of the examination, represented that the above order had one far more serious effect on an officer's prospects than was merited, or was probably intended; and having regard to the circumstances which had frequently led to failure, such as ill health or employment in onerous official duties, they recommended the repeal of the rule of October, 1853.

3. After careful consideration of the subject, the Lieutenant-governor was pleased to issue the notification of Oct. 10, 1870, rescinding the rule of Oct. 13, 1853, and to declare that the first promotion of officers who might thereafter pass should be made according to the ordinary practice, excepting that no officer would be eligible for promotion unless he had been declared to have passed the departmental examination by the higher standard.

4. A question has now arisen as to the order in which officers officiating as joint magistrates of the first and second grade under the operation of Notification No. 4,001, dated Oct. 13, 1853, should revert from those grades. No precedent exists; but, following the argument which led to the cancelment of the order passed in 1853, and considering that sufficient weight is given to the examination if only the first promotion is regulated by it and no subsequent advantage accrues, his Honour is pleased to decide that the Notification of Oct. 13, 1853, shall be understood to apply only to the first steps, i.e., to promotion to the second grade of joint magistrates, officiating or permanent, and that it shall not extend to promotions to, or reversions from, the post of officiating joint magistrate, first grade. If, therefore, an officer has once reached the position of officiating joint magistrate, first grade, he has passed out of the operation of the rule, except so far as regards his promotion to the substantive grade of second-class joint magistrate, or (if reduced) his re-appointment to officiate in that grade, nominations to which will still be regulated by the rules of 1853. His reversion from the grade of first-class joint magistrate will thus be governed only by seniority, or such other cause as the Government may determine.

THE MUTINY OF THE 19TH REGIMENT MADRAS N.I.

The following most important General Order by the Right Hon. the Governor of Madras in Council is dated April 10:—

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council has had under consideration the proceedings of a Court of Inquiry held to investigate certain acts of misconduct and insubordination in the 19th regt. N.I., on the issue of pay to the corps, on the evening of Feb. 11, 1871.

From these proceedings it appears that the regiment was under orders to embark for service in the Straits Settlements, and that, on pay for the month of February and an advance of pay for the month of March being tendered to the men of the regiment on parade, it was refused by some of them in an improper manner.

When the first man of No. 1 company, who refused his pay, was ordered into confinement by his wing commandant, the whole of No. 1 company followed the prisoner to the guard-room, calling out, in a tumultuous manner, that if their comrade were made a prisoner they likewise must be confined. In consequence of the attitude of the men of the company, the order to confine the prisoner in question was not at first carried out by the native officer charged with that duty.

When pay was offered to the men of the 8th company a similar refusal took place, and three men were ordered into confinement. These men were not at once secured by the native officer directed to do so.

The offenders having, on the reiterated orders of the European officers, been placed in the guard-room, the men of No. 1 company continued to throng the verandahs and approaches in a tumultuous manner, and the guard on duty failed to obey directions to clear the place and restore order.

Subsequently, when the officer in command arrived on parade, the regiment was ordered to fall in in column of companies, and explanations regarding pay and allowances were made to the men.

After these explanations the commanding officer ordered the regiment to dismiss; but the men stood steady, and a few spoke from the ranks, and said that the advance tendered was not sufficient for them, and demanded the release of the prisoners who had been confined for insubordinate conduct. In consequence of this demand the officer in command of the regiment, with a weakness which the Governor in Council considers altogether inexcusable, directed the prisoners first of company No. 1, and then of company No. 8, to be liberated and restored to their place in the ranks.

His Excellency in Council has perused the report of these occurrences with the deepest regret and displeasure; for it is well known to every native soldier of this army that a respectful remonstrance, through his officers, against any real grievance will readily obtain for him redress, and that nothing can justify insubordination.

The men of the 19th regiment, on the occasion referred to, were guilty of acts altogether inconsistent with discipline, and incompatible with their duty as soldiers; and the Right Hon. the Governor in Council deems it necessary to mark, in a manner which shall operate as a warning to the native army generally, the opinion which the Government entertains of such conduct, and their resolution to resist and punish every attempt to coerce the Government or its officers by refractory behaviour and disobedience of orders.

His Lordship in Council, therefore, directs that No. 1 company of the 19th regiment, which committed graver acts of insubordination than the others, together with the non-commissioned officers and men who composed the quarter-guard of the 19th regiment N.I. on the evening of the 11th February, 1871, and who failed to carry out orders given them, be sent back from the Straits Settlements to Madras for the purpose of being summarily dismissed the service.

His Excellency in Council is further constrained to observe that had greater care and forethought been exercised by the European officers of the regiment the occurrences now noticed would, in all probability, never have taken place.

To mark his sense of their want of due consideration for the necessities of their men, his Lordship in Council directs that the commandant, wing commandants, and adjutant who were present with the corps on the 11th February, 1871, be deprived of their appointments as early as practicable.

The provincial Commander in Chief will cause this order to be read in Hindoostanee, Tamil, and Teloogoo, at three successive parades, to every regiment of the native army, and will issue the necessary subsidiary orders for giving effect to it, and for replacing those dismissed with drafts of men of good character from other regiments.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

T. L. Seccombe, Esq., C.B., the Financial Secretary of the India-office, was, on the 28th ult., examined respecting the introduction of the income-tax in India. After the Mutiny a trade-tax was levied in the Punjab and Oude; it only produced about £100,000 the first year. An income-tax was first levied in 1860, by Mr. Wilson, at the rate of 4 per cent.; it was imposed for five years. 1 per cent. of the tax was taken for public works; the other 3 per cent. went to revenue, and for the purpose of covering the large deficit that had occurred in the Indian Exchequer. The minimum income on which it was imposed was Rs. 200; incomes of Rs. 200 to Rs. 500 paid 2 per cent.; above Rs. 500 it was 3 per cent., and 1 per cent. for local purposes. It was a tax on the income from every class of property. There was no exemption of zemindars whose land was under the permanent settlement. That point was much discussed at the time. In 1862 a change took place, and the minimum of income taxed was raised from Rs. 200 to Rs. 500, and the separate account of the 1 per cent. for public works discontinued. In 1863 the tax was reduced from 4 to 3 per cent. The Act expired in 1865. Nothing was afterwards done to raise revenue by direct taxation till 1867, when a licence-tax was imposed. The minimum licence was Rs. 4, and the maximum Rs. 500, according to a scale which was in the Act, the minimum being payable on profits of trade amounting to Rs. 200, and not exceeding Rs. 500, and the maximum on profits of Rs. 25,000 and upwards. Persons employed in the public service took out no licences, but were subject to the tax. There were peculiar exemptions of military officers not in civil employment whose pay and allowances did not exceed Rs. 600, and civil officers with salaries of less than Rs. 1,000 per annum. The following year (1868) the Act was repealed by an Act which imposed another tax, which was of wider extent. The minimum was on incomes of Rs. 500, but the highest charge was on four lakhs. In the following year (1869) an income-tax was imposed of 1 per cent. There was a classification of the lower rates of income, but it was practically a 1 per cent. tax, those being exempted whose incomes were below Rs. 500. The old exemptions of military officers remained, and of property devoted to religious and charitable purposes. In the autumn of that year a further Act was passed, the effect of which was to increase the assessment by ½ per cent. on the whole year. It was one of the measures adopted by Lord Mayo when there appeared to be a serious deficit. In the following year (1870) an income-tax of 3½ per cent. was imposed. It was imposed for only one year. In the first income-tax every person was required, as in this country, to render a statement of his income. In the more recent Act that provision was omitted. The first Income-tax Act was framed in order to provide that no one should escape the assessment, and the more recent Act was framed with a view to avoid any oppression on the part of the lower officials. The taxes were collected, as far as practicable, in the year. He could not state the amount produced from each of these taxes, the accounts not having been sent from India, but he should say that the item of £1,110,000 represented approximately the amount raised under the two Acts of 1869. It had been stated that 1 per cent. yielded £700,000.

In his evidence connected with the above the witness said he was unable to explain why all the provisions or clauses of the first income-tax for India were omitted in the more recent Act. The clauses of the original Bill were framed on the basis of the English income-tax, the provisions were made so that no one could escape. A correspondence had passed between the Madras Government and the Supreme Government as to the imposition of the first income-tax. There was a complaint made against a Bengal collector for acts of oppression in collecting the tax, and the officer concerned was censured. He considered the income-tax a proper mode of raising the revenue, if it were requisite to resort to additional taxation at all. It had been stated that trades and professions did not pay so highly in proportion as the bulk of the people, and there would be no injustice in imposing an income-tax. Memorials against the tax had been signed by many of the European classes, and also by the natives. Some of the complaints emanated from Bengal. A memorial, influentially signed, had also come from Madras. The question of the permanently settled estates, claim to exemption from income-tax had been much discussed, and the decision had been given against the claimants to exemption. He believed there had been also a memorial from Bombay. The licence-tax applied mainly to the lower classes and traders. The certificate tax applied also to those who received a larger income. Again, a change was made from the certificate-tax to the income-tax as the most equitable way of suiting the incidence of taxation to the different classes of society throughout the country. The enhanced income tax of 3½ was resorted to from the necessity of the case. The state of the finances demanded some better scheme than the licence-tax; and the re-imposition of the income-tax was considered the best mode of meeting the deficit.

The witness next gave testimony regarding Tributes from the Native States to the Imperial Government, and the subsidies entered into by the native chiefs for troops to protect their States.

In reply to further questions, Mr. Seccombe stated that the sum of £765,126 which appeared, in the accounts as "tributes and contributions," was the aggregate of the accounts received from native States. For the most part they were permanent contributions. A portion of them was paid for the maintenance of military force, a portion for British protection according to the terms of the engagement, and a portion in commutation for military services. In 1867-8, when the amount was £689,296, the charges—as far as he could classify them, were—for maintenance of military service, £281,000; for British protection, £211,000; and in commutation of military service, £125,000; and a payment by Rajahs of petty States, with regard to which he had no definite information, about £70,000. With regard to the receipt of £281,000, the Government of India was under engagements to provide a military force. The Bhopaul Contingent was one portion of the force, the Mysore Division was another. A large portion of the Mysore military expenditure was paid out of the revenue of the Mysore State.

On the 2nd inst. Sir Cecil Beadon's examination on salt was concluded, and that on opium taken up. The witness traced the rapid but fluctuating production of the opium at the annual sales at Calcutta, and the speculation and gambling the system provoked. The increase of production led to a fall in prices, and ultimately the Government found itself incurring a losing revenue by its opium monopoly. The increase in quantity having brought down prices and resulted in a loss to the revenue, Sir Cecil Beadon said he had advised the Government to limit the supplies of opium to the market. Sir Cecil showed that the periodical sales ought not to be of the quantity of opium grown in the year, but a fixed quantity, and there might be a reserve kept in the Government stores to meet the contingency of small crops. The sale ought to be limited to the quantity of opium which the China market might be expected to take, without, on the one hand, reducing prices, or, on the other hand, affecting the revenue; but the price must not be so high as to induce the production of the home-grown opium in China. This was the subject that had engaged the attention of the Government since 1864. In 1869 the proposed new system was formally sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India. The net revenue in 1868-9 reached the maximum sum of £4,904,500. The plan now adopted was a fixed number of chests to be put up for sale. In 1870 the fixed amount was 52,000 chests, as against the 48,000 chests of the previous auction of 1869.

On Friday, the 5th inst., the examination of Sir Cecil Beadon was resumed on opium, and he gave additional testimony in lengthy detail on the auction system and its abuses, the demoralising effects and physical harm done by the consumption of the drug by the natives of India, and the future prospects of a trade so long an important source of revenue to the Calcutta Government. The question of the home growth of the poppy by the Chinese themselves was next entered upon; also the tentative competition of Persia.

Sir Frederick Halliday, late Secretary to the Bengal Legislative Council, was the next witness called, and much the same ground was gone over in his examination on salt and opium as had been taken up by the questions put to Sir Cecil Beadon. Sir Frederick adhered to the opinion that the salt-tax was unobjectionable to the people, and as it was beneficial to revenue, he would not wish to see it interfered with.

The examination turned next on to opium. The witness said there was enough data to prove that the opium revenue was in danger from the increasing productions of Persia and China. Sir Robert Alcock had furnished statistics, showing that the cultivation was considerable, and was increasing in China. There was real cause for alarm. Sir Richard Temple did not think so, according to his "Budget" statements; but his predecessors, Mr. Laing and Mr. Massey, had both warned the Indian Council of the dangers that were gathering round the opium revenue. He (Sir F. Halliday) believed, as was stated in the report before him, that as regarded the Chinese cultivation, the Imperial Government at Pekin held to a retaliatory policy, and longed to avenge itself for British invasion by endeavouring to stamp out the Indian opium cultivation, and by introducing plantations of their own.

On Tuesday, the 8th inst., the committee resumed, and Sir Thomas Pycroft, late political secretary to the Madras Government, was examined on the salt production and revenue of the Madras Presidency. The salt is produced under contracts. The contractors collect the salt under the protection of the Government, who assign to the contractor a certain amount to manufacture. The dealers in the salt as an article of commerce come to the depots for the wholesale supply. The duty-paying salt, for the most part in the neighbourhood of Ganjam, pays Rs. 1 Sa. at the works, and an equal amount is levied as customs duty, so as to bring the total up to Rs. 3 paid by other salts.

In a report containing some account of the salt works of Madras, a proposal occurred to assimilate the Madras system of protection with that of Bengal. Travancore and Cochin imported salt from Madras. An arrangement between the Madras and Cochin Governments provided that the latter should have the salt they imported at the price prevailing in the Presidency.

Sir C. Beadon was recalled and examined on the spirituous and fermented drinks and the drugs of Bengal. The object of the examination was to ascertain the effects on the moral and physical condition of the people by the use of these stimulants and narcotics; but the witness did not agree with the examiners, that there was anything specially or distressfully demoralising from the native habits of drinking, but probably the vice was in greater favour with the upper rather than the lower classes of natives. As to revenue, it certainly was not obtained at the cost of the degradation of the people.

W. G. Pedder, Esq., assistant to the magistrate and collector of Canara, was next called and examined on the salt of Bombay, also on the consumption of spirituous drinks and drugs, and the revenue they produced. The witness's evidence bore a good deal on the common practice of smuggling the salt for the curing of fish. The illicit production of salt in the Bombay Presidency was great; perhaps at least one-fourth of the salt consumed was illicit. The remedy seemed to lie between the duties on foreign fish imported and the reduction of the salt tax in Bombay.

The committee met again on Friday last, when Mr. Pedder's examination on the salt of Bombay was renewed; it gave some minute particulars regarding the revenue and trade. The witness was next examined on the revenue derived from spirituous and fermented drinks, opium, and other drugs, after which Sir Donald Macleod, K.C.S.I., C.B., late Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, was called, and gave evidence on the salt and spirits revenues of the Punjab. Sir Donald submitted a measure he had considered and prepared for the amelioration of taxation and the general condition of the people of India, by means of a "consultative council" to be composed of European and native officials and gentlemen who should mutually consult on their combined interests.

Erratum.—In the last week's report of Dr. Cleghorn's evidence the subjoined sentence should correct the one with which the report concluded:—The expense incurred in the management of the Government Teak plantations in Malabar was about £700 annually, £300 of which was for planting 100 acres additional, or at the rate of £3 an acre.

Miscellaneous.

Appointment.—(India-office, May 8.)—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Major-General Frederick Paul Haines to be a member of the Council of the Governor of Fort St. George.—Gazette.

Albert Insurance Company.—The Albert Insurance Bill having passed, Lord Cairns, the Arbitrator, will hold his first meeting on May 25, and will then hear the Reconstruction Committee in support of their plan.

Military.—The Indian reliefs for the season 1871-72 are now definitely settled. The corps to go out are the 44th, 70th, 54th, 1st battalion 18th (to Malta in relief of the 48th Regiment, who go on to India), and 68th Regiments; those to come home being the 1st battalion 19th, 79th, and 38th Regiments, 3rd battalion Rifle Brigade, and 104th Fusiliers.

Called to the Bar.—Mr. C. P. Lutchmeepathy Naidoo has been called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple. This young Madrassie has for some time been a pupil of Mr Standish Grove Grady, to whose teaching he has already done credit During his sojourn here he has been elected a Fellow of several learned societies, amongst them the "Asiatic," as well as a member of the East India Association. We understand that he left by the steamer last week for Madras, for the purpose of practising at the bar.

Indian Army Administration.—A return has been issued from the India Office, containing the minutes of General Lord Sandhurst while Commander-in-Chief in Bombay and in India, recommending changes in the military commands in chief in India. The office of Commander in-Chief in India includes that of Minister of War, and Lord Sandhurst considers that the performance of the two functions by one man is incompatible with efficiency, and recommends that a military Minister of War, a la Francaise, should be created. He would then divide the present Bengal command into three corps d' armee, to be commanded by Lieutenant-Generals-in-Chief, each of whom would correspond with the Minister of War on all Army matters, and with the Horse Guards, in the same manner as is now done by the officers commanding in the several Presidencies. The Minister of War would receive returns from the Commanders-in-Chief of Madras and Bombay.

India at the International Exhibition.—Most curious are the things sent from India, and most gratifying is it to perceive how many native chiefs have been willing to assist us in our international display. The Maharajah of Benares exhibits a number of vessels used for cooking; pottery from Madras, Mirzapore, Behar, Allygurgh, Armsha, the Punjab, and Oude has been sent either by private individuals or local societies; the Maharajah of Bhurtpore and the Maharajah of Datteah are exhibitors; and even from British Burmah industry joins in the Asiatic specimens. There are some tiles taken from the Pagoda at Mengoon, and a water vessel from the Tenasserim provinces, into which water enters through through the base. In the cattle department we noticed the Cashmere shawl goat, whose long, heavy, curled horn appeared to make his head ache, and who would have been much improved in appearance could he have been safely run through one of the combing machines within earshot; his long hair surrounded him like a curtain which dragged the ground. There is a fine specimen of the fat-tail sheep, brought by the Duke of Edinburgh from India, and sent by him to Regent's Park. The animal is black, with a tail as broad as a shovel.

Education in India.—The thirteenth annual meeting of the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India was held last Friday at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding. The report, which was adopted on the motion of the Bishop of Madras, seconded by Mr. Macfie, M.P., recalled to mind that the Society was a memorial of the great Indian Mutiny, and that since its formation it has expended upwards of £20,000 in the printing of Christian vernacular literature in thirteen of the principal languages, spoken by 180 millions of our Indian fellow-subjects. Its agencies are at work in Bengal, the North-West Provinces, the Punjab, Bombay, Central India, Madras, and Ceylon. The circles of its action in 1869 were 18; last year they were 20. Its schools, which numbered 105, are now 117; while the total of its pupils had risen from 4,111 to 5,122, thus showing an increase for the year of 2 circles, 12 schools, and 1,011 scholars. At the present time the society has 103 students in training as vernacular teachers, and 6,224 heathen children in their schools receiving instruction in secular subjects and the Bible, from Christian masters. It has three training institutions, erected at a cost of £5 000, and about 150 native teachers have been prepared and placed in charge of schools principally connected with missionary societies. These teachers are educating thousands of children in addition to those in the Society's own schools. Their number is being increased at the rate of about 40 every year, and the publications of the Society, of which 3,000,000 copies have been circulated, are extensively used in the missionary schools throughout India. The Society's income for the year amounted to £7,451. 17s. 7d. Its operations are superintended by committees at Calcutta, Allahabad, Umritsur, Ahmednuggur, Madras, and Colombo.

AXLETREE SEATS FOR ARTILLERYMEN.—Captain H. L. Balfour, R.A., has submitted to the Royal Artillery Institution a proposition for mounting a larger number of men on the guns and limbers of field batteries, so as to convey them rapidly to the front in action, without waiting for the ammunition waggons to come up with the rest of the gun detachment. He revives the idea of placing seats for two or more gunners on the axletree of the gun—a plan recommended by the Special Committee on Field Artillery Equipment for India, but not approved by the Director-General of Ordnance, who considered it a matter of minor importance. The prominent part taken by the Prussian field artillery in the late war has, however, again brought the subject under consideration, and the final decision has not yet been given. These axletree seats were tried on a simple plan during the Fenian raids in Canada, and with every good effect, the seats being a piece of canvas or leather on an iron frame, with a support for the back in the shape of a broad strap, the contrivance being so adjusted as not to impede the working of the gun. Captain Balfour says that great importance is given to those seats in the Prussian service, and he recommends, in addition to the extra seats, that other gunners should be mounted on the off horses, so as to bring up at least eight into immediate action. In this he has no intention of rivalling the British horse artillery, which, he says, has established a superiority over that of any other Power—but merely to introduce one of the changes needed to place the field batteries even on a footing with those of Continental armies.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MONDAY, May 8.—KIRWEE PRIZE MONEY.—On the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, respecting the Kirwee Prize money (for Lord Cairns), copies of two letters were ordered, dated respectively the 9th of September, 1869, and the 5th of April, 1871, from Major-General Miller on the part of the Special Prize Committee, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to a large sum of money claimed as booty arising from the conquest and capture of the ex-chiefs of Kirwee by the operations of General Whitlock's troops in 1858.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, May 8.—ARMY REGULATION BILL.—When the House was asked to go into Committee upon the Army Regulation Bill, Major ANSON, in a speech of considerable length, moved a resolution affirming that, if the Purchase System is to be abolished, in order to secure the authority of the State over the officers of the army and in justice to the officers themselves, the regulation value of their commissions ought to be at once returned to them.—The motion, which was seconded by Colonel BARTTELOT, was resisted by Captain VIVIAN, on the ground that the Bill as it stands does complete justice to the officers, and that to yield that which was asked by the gallant member for Bewdley would saddle the country with an unnecessary burden, and would at the same time give to officers far more than that to which they are entitled.—The debate which ensued, and lasted up to midnight, was of a highly technical character, and to the unprofessional auditor presented few features of interest.—Colonel KNOX created some amusement by asserting that Sir H. Storks after putting an end to our connection with the Ionian Islands, and destroying Governor Eyre, was about to destroy the profession of which he was himself a member; and when General HERBERT, failing to discover in the measure a provision the existence of which had been asserted by Mr. Cardwell, flung the Bill across the table to that right. hon. gentleman; and the Secretary for War, after reading the words which he had had in his mind, cast back "the print" to his adversary with a gesture of triumph, there was a ringing cheer from the Treasury bench, and a good deal of laughter from all parts of the House.—The result of the division was the rejection of Major Anson's amendment by a majority of 63—250 to 187.—Major ARBUTHNOT having moved the adjournment of the debate, and a division having been called, Mr. Disraeli rose from his place and walked towards the Speaker's chair. The friends of the Government thinking that he was about to leave the House cheered him warmly; but the laugh was turned against them when the right hon. gentleman quietly seated himself by General Herbert, and remained to divide with his supporters.—This was afterwards described by Mr. BENTINCK as a frantic and violent attempt to leave the House, which, failing for the moment, was speedily repeated with success, Mr. Disraeli having left the House as soon as the division was over.—The motion for adjournment was negatived by a majority of 65—243 to 178.—Thereupon Major JERVIS moved the adjournment, and this was rejected by a majority of 96—283 to 127.—The proposal to adjourn the debate was renewed by Colonel KNOX with no better success, being negatived by a majority of 102—207 to 105. Two more divisions were taken with similar results, and then Mr. GLADSTONE gave way, and allowed the debate to be adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, WEDNESDAY, May 10.—EAST INDIA STOCK.—Mr. GRANT DUFF obtained leave to bring in a Bill to facilitate the payment of dividends on East India Stock, which was then read a first time.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, May 11.—INDIA.—The Marquis of SALISBURY presented petitions from merchants and others in Calcutta and Madras begging their lordships to address the Crown for a Royal Commission of Inquiry, and complaining of the present system of finance, the continual migrations of the Government, and the want of a really representative Legislative Council. The noble marquis said, however, that he did not concur in the prayer of the petition. He believed that a representative Council would give effect to the wishes of a narrow, though influential, class, composed partly of Englishmen and partly of natives, whose views and interests were certainly not those of the people of India. He thought the migrations of the Government to the Hills a comparatively small matter; but he considered that it would be a good thing to save India, which of all things required repose, from the perilous excitement of an annual Budget, and the scandal of estimates continually falsified by results.—The Duke of ARGYLL was glad the noble marquis had not lent the weight of his high authority to the petition, for to grant its prayer would really be equivalent to passing a most unjust vote of censure upon the present Government of India. He (the noble duke) felt it his duty to support the Governor-General, not merely as a matter of principle, but because he thought the administration of Lord Mayo deserving of the warmest eulogy. The petitioners' complaint was in reality aimed at the income-tax; but that tax was nothing more than the licence-tax rendered equitable by its extension to the great zemindars who, under the old arrangement, escaped payment altogether. No doubt the result had been somewhat unfortunate; but, on the other hand, the measures of Lord Mayo had yielded a surplus of £300,000 on the year 1868-9, instead of an apprehended deficit of £2,700,000. In the next year, they gave a favourable balance of a million, and this year it was believed that there would be a small surplus, in spite of a large reduction in the income-tax and the raising of the minimum sum chargeable from Rs. 500 to Rs. 750. After all, there were but 480,000 persons who paid income-tax out of all the millions of India, and considering that the richest natives might otherwise escape contributing almost anything to the public burdens, he could not think the income-tax an unreasonable impost. Recurring once more to the prayer of the petition, the noble duke observed, in conclusion, that the Home Government was, in reality, a standing commission of inquiry, composed of the very ablest men that could be obtained for the purpose. He trusted, therefore, that the House of Commons would not listen to a proposal favourable to the petitioners, of which notice had been given. (Cheers.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY, May 11.—PENSIONS IN INDIA.—Mr. GLADSTONE, in answer to Mr. HAVILAND-BURKE, said that the rule of withdrawing "pensions, or grants of money or consignments of land revenue conferred by the British or any former Government," was in force throughout all India, with the exception of a limited portion of the Bombay Presidency. A Bill, introduced by the Government of India, proposed to assimilate the law with regard to the exceptional portion to the law which prevailed throughout the remainder of the country. The usual course pursued was that such Bills passed through the hands of the authorities in Calcutta before they came under the official notice of the Secretary of State, and the time for the consideration of this particular measure by the Secretary of State, had not, therefore, yet arrived.

ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The House then went into Committee on the Army Regulation Bill, and, after the preamble had been postponed, the further progress was adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, May 12.—THE NAWAB OF TONK.—Mr. R. FOWLER rose to move that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire whether the procedure adopted in the case of the Nawab of Tonk was conformable to recognised principles of justice, and calculated to ensure a right decision being arrived at. The hon. gentleman observed that his hon. friend the member for Gravesend had an amendment on the paper, to the effect that the case should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and if Government assented to that, he should be satisfied, as all the Nawab asked for was inquiry.—Mr. MORRISON seconded the motion, and contended that the affair demanded the investigation of a Select Committee.—Sir C. WINGFIELD moved as an amendment that an humble address be presented to her Majesty praying her to refer the case for consideration by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council under the provisions of the Act 3 and 4 William IV., cap. 41, sec 4, commonly called the Privy Council Act.—Sir E. COLEBROOKE opposed the motion, because of the absence of papers and the absence of Sir Stafford Northcote. The hon. baronet concluded by moving the adjournment of the debate.—Mr. S. CAVE supported this motion, principally on the ground of the absence of the right hon. member for North Devon.—After a few observations from Mr. E. BOWRING, the debate was adjourned.

EAST INDIA STOCKS (DIVIDENDS) BILL.—This Bill passed through Committee.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—By Colonel SYKES, from the Nawab or Sovereign of the State of Tonk, in Rajpootana, stating that in consequence of a cabal against him of Rajpoots, he being a Mahomedan, there was an affray in Tonk in which several lives were lost, that the Governor-General of India made him responsible for the loss of these lives, and unjustly removed him from his sovereignty, and praying the House to appoint a commission to investigate the subject.

THE INDIAN INCOME TAX.

The Asiatic observes that when Mr. Wilson first levied an income-tax, the minimum amount was then, it believes, only Rs. 200. A well-known gentleman, who had himself been a Commissioner of Income-tax in Calcutta, stated some time ago at a meeting of the East India Association, that in 1861 he had to receive a deputation of prostitutes—about two hundred and fifty—who came to protest, not only against the tax, but to state that the peon who delivered the notice of assessment told them that if they gave him a rupee they would not be troubled again; but this they found, to their cost, was not true, as the collector made them pay at least the amount of the assessment, and often more than was due. A number of servants, poor fishermen, and others, whose income was below the assessment rate, also appealed. This state of things having, however, been laid before Lord Canning, the amount of assessment was raised. In corroboration of what we have stated, we will quote from the return of the Income-tax Commissioners of the assessment of Calcutta and its suburbs up to July 31, 1861; the return was only in April, 1862; it therefore took nine months to obtain the returns we refer to. From these we learn that 517 prostitutes and dancing-girls were assessed upon an assumed income of Rs. 128,414. Upon small shopkeepers, artizans, and people of that class, the tax was beyond all proportion to their income, while native bankers so arranged with assessors and collectors that many, for at least one year, escaped altogether; the proof of which is that after more than twelve months from the first levying of the tax, the native bankers and dealers of two bazaars, and a portion of a third one, had never been served with even a notice of assessment. This was afterwards, it is true, to some extent corrected; but there is no doubt that by bribery and corruption of the native and even Eurasian employes in the department, many wealthy men (natives) have escaped; while, on the other hand, the returns of European bankers and merchants have been subjected to reference and enquiry without cause or reason. If this was possible in Calcutta, where the subordinates were subject almost daily to the inspection of the Commissioners and their Secretary, can we be at all surprised if, as we have heard, the gentlemen who, in addition to their duties as magistrates and collectors of revenue, have been called upon to act as commissioners of income-tax, should have deputed the executive duties of this latter office to their subordinates, who would be, as we know, in most cases Eurasians or natives, chiefly, perhaps the latter? With these suppositions before us, we repeat that we fear Lord Mayo's enquiries will not lead to any satisfactory result.

THE ALLEGED FRAUDS IN THE P.W.D. AT POONA.—Yesterday, at the Court of Criminal Sessions, the trial of John Dixon Sharman for frauds on the P.W.D. at Gunnesh Khind was continued before the Hon. Mr. Justice Green. The case for the prosecution closed with the evidence of Abdul Kadur, the Inspector of Police at Poona, after which Mr. Anstey addressed the jury at considerable length on behalf of the prisoner. At the close of the case the jury retired, and on coming into Court, after an absence of two hours, returned a verdict of not guilty on all the charges. Sharman having thus been acquitted in both cases, left the dock a free man.—Times of India, April 22.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)

CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 13, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—"Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—"Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not 'supply a want and fill a place.'"

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—"So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, April 29; Agra, April 27; Calcutta and Madras, April 26.

NOTHING further is reported of Lord Mayo's movements towards Simlah. But an order issued in Calcutta, forbidding the use of thermantidotes in the public offices of Bengal at the public expense, has evoked much bitter pleasantry from those who cannot follow the Government into the Himalayas. The steamy air of Bengal must find its way through the watered tatties as it best can, while the sufferers from this thoughtful order will hardly find much comfort "in thinking on the frosty Caucasus," whence cool blasts will be blowing health and vigour on the dwellers in Simlah.

THE work of legislation is over for the season in Bombay, whence the Governor and his Council have retired to their summer perch at Mahableshwar, after passing the Police Bill and a Bill for taxing that part of the non-agricultural classes which will not have to pay towards the support of the police. The subjects of this latter measure will be required to pay, according to their several classes, a yearly tax of Rs. 1-8, Rs. 3, or Rs. 6.

BESIDES the obstinate rebellion of Yakoob Khan, the Ameer of Kabul has had to send troops against some Khyberie chiefs, with whom a great battle is said to have taken place on the 30th March. Both sides lost heavily, and the Khyberies still held out. On the 16th April they managed to carry off the Governor of Jellalabad to a hill fortress in the Khyber, as a hostage for some of their clansmen detained at Kabul. Their demand for an exchange of prisoners was met by Shere Ali with the despatch of 5,000 horse and foot under Sultan Mohammad Khan, to rescue the Governor of Jellalabad. The Ameer himself was getting ready to follow with more troops, being determined to put down the rising with all possible speed.

ONE way of explaining the late Loshai raids is said to be this:—On the death of a daughter of some Loshai chief, it was needful to procure a number of human heads to burn with her dead body. A party of raiders accordingly started for the British frontier and got what was wanted at the cost of our unfortunate subjects and countrymen. This is a custom which we for our part must insist on putting down at any cost to those who persist in observing it within our own frontiers. The necessary measures for a cold weather campaign against these troublesome neighbours are being steadily carried forward, so far as the season will allow. Road-making on the frontier has been stopped for the present by the rains, and the working parties are being withdrawn from the outposts, except a company a piece left at each of the five principal stockades. In spite of Mr. Edgar's own impressions, it is said that the pending inquiry tends to implicate his friend Sukpilal in the recent raids.

CARBOLIC ACID promises to be a powerful agent in the treatment of that horrible Eastern disease, leprosy. A wonderful cure of a leprous Jew was lately reported from India, and now we learn that a like success has followed the use of the same medicine at Ootacamund.

THE "Gazetteer of all India" is steadily progressing under Dr. Hunter's careful supervision. Several sections are already in print or going through the press. The most backward sections appear to be Bengal, Madras, the Punjab, and the North-West Provinces, but in almost every case the materials are being collected as fast as possible, and the printing of the whole work will probably begin next spring.

LORD MAYO has followed the lead of the enterprising Hindu who lately offered a prize for a novel descriptive of native life and manners in Bengal. His Lordship has just offered a prize of Rs. 500 for a similar object; the best Bengali tale or novel, of not less than 200 pages, which shall "faithfully delineate the character and habits of the leading Hindu races in India, and describe their national habits and customs." If a thoroughly good story can be produced for that sum, Lord Mayo will have gained a decided bargain.

RUSSIA appears to be resolved on punishing Khiva for its alleged support of the insurgent Tartars on the Steppes. Troops are already being sent from Orenburg to attack Khiva on the side of Usturba, while others are advancing on Jizzak from the opposite side.

IT is comforting to remember that England is not the only country in which the old belief in witchcraft still leads to acts of barbarous stupidity. India also has its witch-finders who differ from ours only in the remedy applied to the complaint. A case of witch-swinging has just been reported from Oodipore in Rajpootana. The headman of a Bheel village was taken ill, and a witch-finder was employed to discover the culprit who had caused his sickness. The supposed witch, "Deeta, wife of Loi," was first put to the water test. A bamboo being firmly embedded at the bottom of a pond, she had to let herself down by it to the bottom, and there stay while somebody shot an arrow from his bow and another ran to pick it up. Her guilt was proved by her coming up to breathe before the right time. She was thereupon taken to a tamarind tree, her eyes bound with a bandage of red chillies, and herself swung by the heels, head downwards, for two days and a half, in order to make her confess the crime. At night she used to be taken down and fed, but the rope was never untied. At last the poor wretch was somehow freed from her torturers, who probably left her on the ground for dead. Unfortunately for the witchfinder, his exploit brought him into the hands of the Political Assistant, who most unkindly sentenced him to five years' imprisonment. His accomplices are said to have suffered very barbarous treatment from the native officials into whose hands they fell. If they did, they will certainly take good care not to swing a witch too near an inhabited neighbourhood.

PROFESSOR VAMBERY still keeps the English public informed from time to time of his views on Central Asian affairs. The siege of Herat by Shere Ali's rebellious son Yakoob Khan has just furnished him with a new text for his favourite theme. The people of Herat, he declares in his recent letter to the Times, have never forgotten the ills they have so often suffered at the hands of the "greedy Afghans," whose rule strikes terror into the breasts of the Persian and Shiah dwellers in Herat. The death of their late Sultan, Ahmad Jan, is still regretted by them, and their sympathies are fast growing up around his two sons, Shahnawaz and Iskandar Khan, both enterprising princes, one of whom was "the first Afghan who entered the Russian service," and is still in Russia's pay, while the other, Shahnawaz, lately a prisoner in Shere Ali's hands, is now most actively engaged in efforts to overthrow that monarch's rule. Yakoob Khan's success against Herat, if he should succeed, will therefore be owing either to his secret understanding with Shahnawaz Khan, or else to "the paid acquiescence of Persia," whose intrigues in that quarter are pretty well known, and whose feelings towards Shere Ali have been much embittered by the encouragement he has given to the scheme for English intervention through Colonel Goldsmid in the dispute between Persia and Cabul regarding the Seistan frontier. On the issue of Yakoob Khan's undertaking will depend, according to Mr. Vambéry, the fate of Shere Ali's government. Should Herat be captured, the end of that rule "has inevitably begun," and all our subsidies will have been thrown away. In that event we shall have only ourselves to blame, for did we not, through Lord Lawrence, encourage Afghan princes to come forward as pretenders to the throne? Yakoob Khan is only following the hint which Lord Lawrence gave Afzul Khan in 1866, when the late Viceroy expressed his readiness to accept Afzul as "a friend and ally" if he could only consolidate his power in Kabul. Without disputing this latter point with the Professor, we would merely observe that Herat apparently is far from being taken, and that Shere Ali has weathered worse storms than this of Yakoob's raising. As for Persian intrigue, we believe that the Shah had quite as much as Shere Ali to do with Colonel Goldsmid's mission to Seistan.

A NOTEWORTHY feature of Colonel Strachey's statement on Public Works is the sketch he gives of the new State Railways begun or ordered on the narrow guage. Of the Lahore and Peshawar line, 270 miles long, only a section of 173 miles to Rawal Pindi has yet been sanctioned. A length of 102 miles from Lahore to Jhelum is already being made, along the great trunk road. The whole line will probably cost an average of £10,000 a mile, about half of the whole cost being set against three bridges over the Ravee, Chenab, and Jhelum, the plans of which are being prepared in England. On the time required for building these bridges will depend the opening of the whole line, on which £200,000 will be spent this year, and half a million the next. Next comes the Indus Valley Line of 500 miles from Kotree to Mooltan. Of this line a section of 300 miles from Mooltan down to Roree is now under survey, which will soon be completed. It is still unsettled whether the remaining 200 miles shall be carried along the right or the left bank of the Indus. The Rajpootana system includes a line of 236 miles from Agra by Jaipore and Sambhur to Ajmere, a branch line of 125 miles towards Ulwar, Rewari, and Delhi, and a short branch of 7½ miles from Sambhur to the Salt Works lately leased by the Indian Government. On all these lines the surveys and estimates are well forward, and the section from Delhi to Rewari may be opened next year. For the Agra and Jaipore section a contract will probably be taken.

SEVERAL lines have also been made or projected in the native States. In the Berars a branch of five and a-half miles from the G.I.P. Railway to Oomraotee is already working well; and so is the Khangaum line of seven and a-half miles. Work has already begun on the Hydrabad line of 116 miles, thanks to the hearty co-operation of Sir Salar Jung, whose Government will bear the whole cost. This line will be laid on the old broad guage of five feet and a-half. Surveys are also progressing in Mysore. A line of 100 miles from Mysore to Bangalore, under the narrow guage of three feet three inches, has already been sanctioned in India, on condition of the needful capital, nearly half a million, being furnished from Mysore itself.

THE Indore line of eighty-four lines, the money for which, a million sterling, has been advanced by the Maharajah Holkar himself, at 4½ per cent., will connect his capital with the G.I.P. Railway at Kundwa. After some delay the cost of this line, which contains a gradient of one foot in forty for about three and a-half miles, has been practically settled, and the surveys are near completion. An extension towards Ajmere is also under survey. A line of forty-five miles from Wurdah, through Hinghunghat, to Wurora, in the Central Provinces, will bring the newly-discovered coalfields of Chanda into connection with the traffic of the G.I.P. Railway. The surveys and estimates have already been submitted to the Indian Government, which only awaits orders from home to begin the work. A survey of the line from Dharwar to Carwar is also going on, under the orders of the Bombay Government. This is said to be a difficult undertaking, and nothing definite has yet been reported from Bombay. The line from Carwar to Hooblee would be about sixty miles long, but further extensions will no doubt be demanded. The results of the surveys north of the Ganges lines, towards Assam and Darjeeling, are now under the consideration of the Indian Government. It is also a question whether the Government or the Oude and Rohilkund Company will undertake the line already surveyed between Moradabad and Ramnuggur, at the foot of the Kemaon hills. Another of the pending questions concerns the best mode of connecting Moradabad with the Delhi Railway system. The projected line of 166 miles from Rangoon to Prome has already been surveyed at considerable cost, and the results will shortly be submitted to the Home Government. The greater part of this line will run along the existing cartroad, and its probable cost is reckoned at £900,0000. Lastly, there is the line from Nagpore towards Rajpoor, for which a survey has at length been sanctioned, and a plan of defraying the cost of construction brought forward by the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces.

WITH regard to the State lines through Sind and the Punjab, Lord Napier's minute of 7th July, 1870, demands serious attention. Looking at the question of railways as a soldier, the Commander-in-Chief argues strongly in favour of continuing the broad guage system from Kotree to Peshawar. He "could never see any good reason for cutting off a few hundred miles of difficult country out of a main line of 1,500 miles, and rating its cost and probable returns separately from the whole line as a justification for not completing it." Although the Umbeyla Campaign "made it painfully evident that we ought to have had a railway to Peshawar," the necessity of making such a railway, and that immediately, has not yet to his Lordship's knowledge been fully recognised. Others besides himself will certainly be "surprised to find the completion of the railway to Peshawar put down in the financial scheme for 1885, and the completion of the Indus line for 1890." We can only hope that there is some mistake in these figures. To defer the Peshawar line for fifteen and the Indus Valley line for twenty years more, were a blunder beyond excuse. If any lines call for early completion, it is these two, which would bring the Punjab into swift communication with Bombay and Kurrachee, and guard our North-Western and Western Frontiers from the worst dangers of any sudden attack. "Rather than see such a fatal delay"—writes Lord Napier—"I should submit to any minor evil, such as a break of guage. For instance a narrow guage might, I believe, be laid on the Lahore and Peshawar road to complete the communication from Jhelum in one year, without turning a spadeful of earth, and would pay its value in political security and economy of transport by the time the main line. . . . would be advanced to that point." The "minor evil" of a break of guage his Lordship will have to submit to as it is. Let us hope that to this evil, which is greater in respect of the Sindh than the Upper Punjab Line, will not be added the far greater evil of an unwise and needless delay in completing the line to Peshawar. Any sort of railway, if made at once, would in this case be preferable to the best possible line deferred for fifteen or twenty years.

AMONG the newly made Knights Commanders of the Star of India it is pleasant to find the names of two such worthies as John William Kaye, Secretary to the India Office in the Political and Secret Department, and Henry Sumner Maine, the late Law Member of the Viceroy's Council. Both of them have fairly earned this honour by their public services, although these in the case of the former are of a kind which the public can less easily appreciate than the heads of his own department. Both too have rendered their country services of another sort, services which we would gladly think have aided somewhat in winning them their new distinction. While the learned author of "Ancient Law" has just been adding a new chapter, drawn from his Indian studies, to the history of comparative jurisprudence, the historian of the Afghan and Sepoy Wars may claim to be the first writer who has earned a wide popularity by his treatment of Indian themes on a large scale. Another of the new Knights-Commanders, whose name we are glad to notice, is Major-General George Jameson, Head of the Audit-Department in the India Office, and erewhile President of the Military Finance Commission for India.

In the course of the debate on Mr. Muntz's proposal to limit the working of the Army Regulation Bill to the regulation prices, and leave the extra-regulation prices to shift for themselves, reference was made on both sides to the Bonus system as it prevailed in the old Indian Army. The making up of a purse for the benefit of a retiring officer was declared by Colonel Anson to have nothing immoral about it, nor did the evidence as to the working of the bonus system justify the notion of its practical unfairness to the officers concerned. Colonel Sykes went still further in his praise of a system which had been sanctioned by the Court of Directors as conducive to the efficiency of a seniority service by the impulse it gave to promotion throughout all ranks of the army. He maintained moreover that the system in question received the willing support of ninety-nine out of every hundred Indian officers. Sir Charles Wingfield on the contrary denounced the bonus system as the cause of almost universal indebtedness, and affirmed that officers who could not afford to join in buying out their seniors were sure to be "badgered out of their regiments." Statements so opposite are not easy to reconcile, but we are pretty sure that ninety-nine out of a hundred officers will question the truth of Sir C. Wingfield's assertions regarding the lot of an officer who could not or would not pay his share towards a regimental step. Can Sir Charles point to a single instance of such a fate as he describes? We doubt it greatly. In the first place it would not have been easy to badger out of his regiment an officer who did not want to go, and besides the whole sentiment of the service was dead against such a method of ruining the worldly prospects of an offending comrade. Any old officer must remember some instance of the consideration shown in this respect towards some one who had fairly qualified himself for dismissal from the service. With regard to those who merely declined to help in buying out a senior, it was usual, we believe, to effect the purchase without their aid. But the instances of such refusal were very rare, for reasons easy to understand, and we doubt much that anyone ever suffered for his contumacy in the way described by Sir C. Wingfield. The extent of indebtedness too is clearly overstated, so far as that was directly owing to the bonus system. A good many officers indeed borrowed from the Banks the means of buying steps, but they endured the present inconvenience for the sake of a large definite gain in the future; and this is a point which the Home Government has strangely overlooked in defining the limits of compensation due for the utter loss of that retiring bonus, to which an officer's previous payments necessarily led up. We hope and trust that the question of compensation will yet be reconsidered in a spirit not less illiberal than that of Mr. Cardwell's compromise with the officers of her Majesty's army.

We are glad to assure our readers that a pension of £400 a-year has been granted by the Council of India to the widow of Sir H. Durand.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, May 23, 1871.

SIR H. MAINE ON VILLAGE COMMUNITIES.

That the late Law Member of the Viceroy's Supreme Council has not been idle since his appointment to the chair of Jurisprudence at Oxford University, his published Lectures on Village Communities in the East and West abundantly prove.* This new contribution to the study of comparative jurisprudence by the author of "Ancient Law" comes with special weight from one whose Indian experiences have enabled him to follow up and confirm the discoveries made by recent explorers in the fields of Western archæology. Sir H. Maine has done for India what Maurer, Nasse, and Haxthausen have lately been doing for Teutonic Europe. With the help of data furnished by Lord Lawrence and Mr. George Campbell, he has succeeded in making the village system of Northern India throw much useful light on the history of land-tenures in England, Germany, and Russia. Once more that primæval brotherhood of the great Aryan races in the East and West, which modern learning has placed beyond doubt in the sphere of language, is brought out with almost equal precision in respect to social usages connected with the land. Many an old English custom which still lingers among us in spite of legal processes and modern tendencies finds its counterpart or explanation in the social life of a village community in India at the present day. Readers acquainted with the distinctive features of that life will hardly find in this volume anything about it that is absolutely new. But such persons are still comparatively few, and the book is not meant for their especial benefit. They will not be the last however to admire the thoroughness with which the author has applied his knowledge of a life already passing away in India to corresponding phases of life past or present in other countries, nor are they likely to ignore the value of his many passing remarks on the conflict long since begun in India between native traditions and Western ideas.

Nothing for instance can be clearer or more suggestive than Sir H. Maine's second Lecture on the Sources of Indian Law. To the excellence of the work done by the Settlement Officers who periodically adjust the land-revenues of Indian provinces, and by the Revenue Courts or Boards which decide questions at issue between the rent-payers and the Government, Mr. Maine bears cordial witness, noting by the way how "surprisingly few" are the appeals from these latter courts in comparison with the cases settled by them, and what a wealth of information bearing on Indian usages lies to hand in the reports, circulars, and decisions of the Revenue Officers. Next in significance to these "results of quasi-judicial agency" come the proceedings of the Civil Courts, and the sway for good insensibly wielded by the old Supreme Courts of the three Presidencies over the thoughts and feelings of the natives who lived within their reach. From the evidence before him Sir Henry is led to believe that "the even justice of these courts was evidently regarded as quite making up for the strangeness of the principles upon which they acted." The natives indeed, as he well observes, are ready enough to surrender a cherished custom in return for "any tangible advantage;" and it must be remembered that the codified law of India, as laid down by Manu and his expounders, is far from coextensive with the whole law of India, and has never penetrated deeply among the people. In India moreover, as the author takes care to remind us, custom is often a synonym for what the sovereign may command. Less fruitful of good was the influence of the Supreme Courts on the character of the law administered by their provincial rivals, the Sudder Courts, in whose hands the changing customs of the country were apt to harden into definite, narrow, and unbending rules. The fluid matter became solid, the Sudder Judges clung to old use and wont more tenaciously than the natives themselves, and thus it happened that until the latter began to educate themselves, "the influence of the English rather retarded than hastened the mental development of the race."

How large a part of Indian law consisted of "a great body of unwritten custom, differing locally in detail, but connected by common general features," is another point on which Sir H. Maine properly insists. Of this unwritten law, older and more widely observed than the written code of the Brahmins, the people themselves, in their several classes and villages, have been the careful guardians from time immemorial. Much of it has been overruled or distorted by Brahmin interpreters; there is nothing for instance in the unwritten law of property to warrant the Brahminical practice which reduces the widow's rights of inheritance to little more than a trusteeship. Many large gaps however in the body of written law have always been filled up by these traditional rules and practices, and on their witness Mr. Maine continually depends in his demonstration of the close family likeness between the village system of India and the old agricultural customs of Teutonic races. So marked indeed is the likeness in question, that their common origin might almost be taken for granted, even if we had no grounds for tracing the people who developed them to a common stock.

Alike in India and in Germany the primitive form of land-tenure seems to have been collective. A group of families made up the Indian village and the Teutonic Mark. As the family was the unit of social, so the mark or village was the unit of political life. The division of the Mark was threefold. The Common Mark, the Old English Folkland, was held in common by the whole community. The Arable Mark, or Feldmark, was parcelled out between the several families for cultivation; and each family had its own separate dwelling or cluster of dwellings in the mark of the Township or village. Each family was governed by its natural head, the housefather as the Germans expressively phrase it. Within his own dwelling the housefather was absolute lord and master. In the Arable Mark he had his own separate piece of ground, but he could not cultivate it as he pleased. This Mark was usually divided into three "commonable" fields, one of which had to lie fallow every third year. Each householder had a share in each of these fields, but he was bound to raise the same crops as his neighbours, and to let each field lie fallow in its turn. A common right of pasturage on the fallow and among the stubbles of the plough-land still further limited his individual freedom. On the Common Mark he had no rights at all apart from his neighbours; his cattle grazed on the common pasture under the charge of a common herdsman, and he cut his wood in the forest under the eyes of a communal officer. As if yet further to counteract any feeling of absolute ownership in the land, there was a periodical "shifting of severalties," or redistribution of the several lots in the Arable Mark. To this very day traces of this last usage may be found, plentiful in Russia, less frequent in Germany, and few but not uncertain in our own country. Even now there are parts of England where the three-field system of cultivation still lingers in a recognisable shape.

The broad resemblance between these Western customs and those of Indian may be seen at a glance by any one acquainted with the Indian village system. In India as in England we find a threefold division of the village property. There is "the arable mark, divided into separate lots, but cultivated according to minute customary rules binding on all." The waste or common land, out of which the Arable Mark has been cut, is enjoyed in common by the whole community. Within the village itself each householder rules despotically over his own household, and the whole body of householders obeys a superior council of elders in all questions of disputed custom. In some parts of the country too the division into three common fields may yet be found; but this is a point on which no very close analogy need be expected between countries so widely different in respect of climate as India and Northern or Central Europe. The true analogy, according to Mr. Maine, should be sought in the number and minuteness of the rules enforced in both cases with a view to reconcile the interests of the whole community with those of its several parts. Private property in cultivated land has still to coexist with a joint system of cultivating that land. When water for instance has been conveyed by a Government canal to the neighbourhood of a village, the council of elders, or the village headman proceeds to regulate the amount of each man's share and the mode of using it. In the Central Provinces the whole of the Arable Mark has sometimes been shifted from one part of the village domain to another, and a periodical redistribution of the cultivated lots has even been recorded. But a custom of this kind, however common it may once have been, has gradually disappeared before the natural progress towards a more permanent state of things. Of far more living significance is the internal polity of the Indian village as compared with the Teutonic Township. Each separate household is still in practice despotically governed by its family chief, and the tendency of our rule to break through the traditions that guard the privacy of family life has been more deeply resented than any other act that could be laid to our charge.

Another point of marked resemblance between Indian village communities and those of old Europe may be found in the self-sufficing organisation of both. Each typical Indian village is a little world in itself, with its own government, its own police, its own cluster of trades and callings. It keeps a Brahmin for religious and a dancing-girl for festive purposes. The blacksmith, the harness-maker, the shoemaker, follow each the trade of his immemorial forefathers. There is always a village accountant, who keeps the records and manages the business accounts of the community for a regular payment in grain or land. There are also certain trades, such as that of the grain-dealer, which seem invariably to be followed by persons outside the regular village pale, who may live in the village, and work for it, without enjoying any right of recognised membership. All these and such-like peculiarities, of which broken relics are now found in Teutonic Europe, still retain their primitive completeness in various parts of India. Yet even there the old customs are gradually undergoing changes similar to those which feudalism and modern progress have long since brought about in most parts of Europe. Russia and India are the two last countries in which the old communal customs remain largely intact; but the inevitable process of decay and reconstruction has already marked the village system of both countries for its own, in spite of the resistance offered in the one case by the tender Conservatism of English administrators, and by the socialist tendencies of a strong Russian party in the other.

THE INDIAN FINANCE COMMITTEE.

The Friend of India remarks that meagre as the telegrams with respect to the Indian Finance Committee are, they show how very much beyond the mere figures of Budgets the inquiries will extend. Already evidence as to the Land Settlements in the Central Provinces, the capabilities of British Burmah, and much besides, has been given. It was not difficult to foresee that a thousand matters not purely financial must of necessity be taken in as part of its business by a Financial Committee, and yet this does not involve the unsettling process of suggestions for the complete reconstruction of Government. Every reasonable thing sought for, either by natives or Europeans, may be attained by this Committee, and in the quietest possible way in the form of a mere inquiry into finance. As yet questions that have divided the Indian Government and the people for the last two years have not been touched, the Committee's attention evidently being given to the foundation of the whole matter, the principles that underlie the action not of these two years merely but of all years since the transfer of power from the Company to the Crown. The Committee will find these facts:—First, that we need public works, education and an army. Secondly, that the last costs an immense deal more than it ought, that the second has almost to be forced by a beneficent despotism, the people for the most part not caring a straw about it, and in most cases, even where they do care for it, only doing so as a means of "getting on in life," while the first is almost everywhere complained of in the aggregate, and almost as generally pleaded for by the various Provinces —each for itself. Thirdly, that no Indian financier is able to tell us where more money can be had, if the public wants or the wants of the Governments increase. We have immense resources in minerals, branches of industry that once were the wonder of the world, the gorgeous subject of glowing romance. Even the Arabian story-tellers could not dispense with the Indies. We have railways and canals that ought to pay well. We have the glorious privilege of a monopoly of the right to drug the Chinese. In fact, we have a host of advantages, yet we fail to make ends meet. Native princes, defended by our armies, go to sleep in peace and security, and find their funds ample, while the Government that provides for the peace and security is at its wits' end. This and many kindred subjects will naturally come up—indeed, one may see are coming up in the enquiry, which nevertheless is so simple and unassuming in its form as to excite no false hopes. It will get to the very bottom of many a dark subject before its work is done, with the result, we suppose, of real gain to Indian administration and of the people at large.

THE IRRIGATION BILL.

The Englishman notes how completely the forebodings as to the ultimate practicability of the measure to which we at that time gave utterance have been re-echoed by the native members of Council, whose opinions on this subject must carry great weight, when we consider that the eventual practicability of the Act depends entirely upon the willingness of Bengali landed proprietors to submit to its provisions, a right of which, judging from its unattractive features, we are quite sure they will thankfully avail themselves. We have often descanted on the inutility of merely "enabling Acts" in this country on questions involving fiscal enterprise. The present Act, however, possesses the two-fold disadvantage of permissibility in the first stage, and arbitrary compulsion in the second. It seems to us that the Act, if it ever came into operation, would interfere most unfairly with the rights of private property. As the Act now stands, the proprietors of not less than a moiety of any tract of country covered by a jheel can insist on its application, and the proprietors of the remaining portion, however disinclined they may be to run the risk of the heavy outlay necessary for the reclamation of the swamp, liable as it will even then be to constant re-submersion from the autumnal rains, and however convinced that the ultimate profit will not suffice to re-imburse them for the expense, must consent to saddle themselves with the onerous liabilities of the Act. We have always understood that the principle of interference with private proprietary rights was inseparable from State exigency, or unmistakable public benefit—operations under the Railway Acts at home, and under the "Acquisition of Lands' Act" in this country, proceed on the assumption that the public or State necessity requires a private sacrifice. Still, under whatever circumstances the compulsory transfer takes place, a quid pro quo is invariably obtained; a sheriff's jury at home, and arbitrators in this country, decide in the last resort what compensation is to be made. In such cases, the compulsory nature of the transaction is never lost sight of as an important element in apportioning the compensation. Under the present Act there is, it is true, no transfer of property; but it seems to us that to insist on the proprietors of half a tract of country consenting to change a swamp of 100 years' standing into arable land at their own expense, upon the ipse dixit of the other half, would involve, in the opinion of most landholders, a still more serious infraction of private right than a compulsory transfer. Moreover, in this case there is no pretence of State necessity; and, secondly, there is no compensation except the profit which the proprietors may by their own efforts ultimately be able to obtain. We regret that an attempt on the part of the Native Members of Council to divest this part of the Act of its extreme stringency, by proposing that the consent of the proprietors of at least two-thirds of the area affected should be necessary to bind the remainder, was injudiciously frustrated. But two diverse principles have been adopted in this singular measure in dealing with proprietors who are owners of the swamp, and proprietors who are indirectly interested in the reclamation, which phrase is explained to mean "the proprietors of any lands which before the commencement of the works were to some extent fit for cultivation, but were improved by the said works." These are, in fact, the owners of the property in the vicinity of the original swamp who ultimately derive benefit from its reclamation. The entire property of the prior class of proprietors is to be hypothecated for the repayment of the advances actually made by Government, whether the total expense be within the original estimate or amount to ten times that sum, quite irrespective of any consideration as to whether the profit is likely to be proportionate to the outlay; while the amount to be proportioned against the latter class is not to exceed "the amount of the increased value which the Commissioners may consider, after twelve months' experience, has accrued to their lands by the works." Apart from the difficulty of estimating (only after so short an interval) the benefit which the lands have derived, we see no good grounds for drawing any distinction between these two classes. Those proprietors whose ultimate benefit is from the beginning doubtful, are the only persons from whom Government is to realise the uttermost farthing which the experiment may have cost, while those who are under no liability, and run no risk, are certain to gain whatever profit is ultimately obtained.

THE INDIAN STAFF CORPS.

The Madras Times holds that the Indian Staff Corps is one of the most puzzling of our institutions. Originally designed by Lord Halifax as a corps d'elite from which to recruit officers for the multifarious staff appointments falling to the lot of military men in this country, it was ushered into the world with undue haste—a puny, ill-formed, and weakly bantling. Its infancy may be described as simply a tedious catalogue of all the ailments afflicting childhood. The doctors were always in consultation upon the complaints of this little wretch, the misbegotten progeny of a great man's brain; and it was only by continually drenching it with drugs and nostrums that it was kept above the ground, to which it might properly have been committed at the first. From its birth to the present date it has been sustained only by physic, and to pursue the metaphor still further, it will probably expire suddenly for lack of a constitution whenever its stomach can no longer retain the artificial nourishment with which the doctors have managed to keep up its strength for so long. From the very first, the right honourable author of its being was compelled to confess himself ashamed of it, and, as its history relates, attempted to prove it somebody else's brat by disfiguring its infantile countenance, with the object, no doubt, of removing any family resemblance to himself. It was a corps d'elite only for a very short time, that is to say, if it was ever indeed worthy of a title assuming so much; then it was opened recklessly to every officer who chose to pass a simple Hindostani test to enter it, and its individuality was lost before it was fairly out of its long clothes. Lord Halifax having cast his creation upon the parish, Lord Cranbourne charitably took charge of the foundling, and with this effect, that by abolishing the vernacular test, its sole claim to a distinct existence, he practically tossed it aside in a moribund condition, with just a gasp in its corpus, however, for a successor's squeeze. That squeeze the Duke of Argyll generously inflicted by permitting members of the corps who had passed no test whatever to hold regimental appointments, so that it may be considered a matter of doubt whether the Staff Corps as a staff corps has any real existence at this moment or none. The author of a clever little work, which has recently attracted much attention, winds up his eloquent tale with the peroration, "Good Heavens, gentlemen, what is to become of Ginx's baby!" We may ask a similar question, and inquire what may be the ultimate fate of Lord Halifax's brat? No one seems to know. It is generally admitted that our juvenile Ginx—the Staff Corps—is in a very bad way indeed, being, in truth, little better than a costly sham and pretence, yet nothing is done to ameliorate its condition, and, what is worse, there appears no probability of anything being done in the matter. We would suggest a few reforms which might probably have the effect of rendering the Corps a less ridiculous institution than it is at present. With this object in view, then, let us suppose all staff appointments in India, such as military men usually fill, as the rights and privileges of the Indian Staff Corps. Let the Government devise an especial and searching test,—approaching somewhat to that which obtains at the English staff college—for all officers, whatever their rank or service, who may be desirous of other employment than that to be found with native regiments. Abolish private patronage, introduce competition, and, in fact, let the best men win the best prizes of the Indian military service.

Bengal.

COOCH BEHAR.—The Government of India has admitted a claim advanced, some time ago, by the Cooch Behar State, to a compensation for losses sustained in supplying provisions to the British troops during the Bhootan war.

STORM AT ALLAHABAD.—The storm of April 21 caused (says our Allahabad contemporary), besides a vast amount of material damage, distressing loss of life. Eleven men are known to have been killed in this district by the hail; and there are reports, not yet however verified, of seven more deaths from the same cause.

LITERARY.—The Indian Daily News has been informed that Dr. E. Trumpp has been engaged by the Secretary of State to translate the Seikh Grunth, or sacred works, on a salary of £500 for the first, and £400 for the second year of his residence in India in the performance of that duty.

CASHMERE OR SIMLA?—The universally large number of visitors who have this year gone to Cashmere will considerably diminish, it is expected, the crowd of bachelors who usually throng the hotels and clubs of Simla, Nynee Tal, and Mussoorie; not a few, the Pioneer hears, have been frightened from going to Simla by the prospect of an unusually gay and abnormally expensive season.

BUDDHIST REMAINS AT YUSUFZAI.—The visit of Dr. Leitner to Yusufzai last Christmas seems to have given archæological researches a very satisfactory impulse. The Sappers and Miners at Takht-i-bahi have unearthed a great portion of the Buddhist town buried there, while another, equally large, has been discovered a few miles north of Hoti Murdan.

MILITARY SERVICE IN INDIA.—During the past year 1,098 men volunteered from regiments returning to England to regiments remaining in India. Of these, 342 volunteered from the 1st Battalion 1st Royals, 209 from the 90th foot, 164 from the 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade, 157 from the 1st Battalion 7th Fusiliers, 134 from the 103rd Fusiliers and twenty-seven from the 88th Foot.

CIVIL SALARIES.—The Daily Examiner, a Calcutta journal, is responsible for the statement that "the Government of India has suggested to her Majesty's Secretary of State for India the necessity of revising the salaries of the Government civil officers in this country, and has recommended that Mr. F. S. Chapman, of the Bombay Civil Service, should be appointed to that special duty."

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—H. E. Lord Napier of Magdala, accompanied by Colonel Dillon, military secretary, Major Moore, interpreter, and Captain FitzGeorge, aide-de-camp, arrived in Agra safely on the evening of Saturday, April 15. Lord Napier was to have held a review of all the troops at Allahabad on Thursday morning, April 20, and to have left Allahabad by the mail train on the same night.

THE WARDAH RAILWAY.—The Government of India, in the Public Works Department, have published a resolution that having in view the probability of a railway being constructed to the Wardah coal fields, it is considered desirable to provide the funds that may be required during the current year, and a sum of five lakhs has been reserved to meet any expenditure that may be incurred.

THE STATION OF JHANSI.—The Pioneer says:—"Jhansi, as a military cantonment, is to be abolished. The battery of artillery, which was stationed there, has already been removed to Nowgong, without any relief having been arranged for; while the detachment of H. M.'s 106th Regiment has been reduced to three companies, and these, it is almost certain, will be removed before next cold season."

GENERAL BARROW.—General Barrow was to proceed to Simla not later than the 6th of May for six months. The latest intelligence respecting his health reports very favourable progress. During his absence Sir George Couper, Bart., will most probably officiate, although (says the Lucknow paper) vague rumours are abroad among the native community of some Punjab official coming to take his place.

THE OLD STORY.—The iron girder bridge in the Mohun Pass, with a due sense of its obligations to its constructors, the P.W.D., is, says the Pioneer, threatening to collapse. The soul of the Superintendent Engineer, 1st Circle, at Deyrah Dhoon, is grievously troubled on its account, and an experienced officer is about to be deputed to look at and report on it. The report will then be speedily acted on, or it will not.

THE REVENUE BOARD.—The Bengal Board of Revenue is doomed. "The members are no longer to sit in consultation together as of yore, hearing cases, deciding petitions and references, and being, in general, jointly responsible for the work turned out. But each member is to have a department or departments made over to him, with a secretary, and he is to be responsible for all that is done in it. The change is feasible enough," adds the Indian Mirror, from which we derive the above information, "without an alteration of the law,—although, we suppose, that will follow in time, now that the disruption of the Board is fully determined upon. It must be clear that the Hon. George Campbell is a man of decision and firmness."

THE SHOE QUESTION.—A judicial officer in Lucknow is stated to have once more resuscitated the great question of shoes. He is said to have issued an order on the 23rd February that native gentlemen admitted to the honour of sitting on the Bench must put off their shoes. Hence much indignation on the part of the native press, as the persons to whom the rule would apply are generally men of considerable social status.

THE "ISABELLA BROWN."—In regard to the loss of the ship Isabella Brown, on the Saugor Sand in the Hooghly, we are now informed that she was driven on the Sand during a squall, while under a pilot's charge, on Sunday, the 16th April. All the hands were saved, but they lost everything except the clothes they had on when they took to the boats. The Englishman makes an appeal on behalf of these unfortunate men.

CIVIL.—Indian Public Opinion congratulates Mr. Leslie Saunders on having obtained the Commissionership of Ajmere, an appointment for which he possesses eminent qualifications. He presumes that on Mr. Saunders's promotion Mr. F. E. Moore, who has been working hard at Lahore, will get Hoshyarpur, and Mr. Barclay be appointed to Lahore. Mr. Barclay is one of the best lawyers we have.

DELICATELY PUT.—Natives now and then say a good thing without meaning it. We have all heard of the Bengalee who, when an English traveller pushed rather violently, but accidentally, against him on a railway platform, started back and exclaimed, "Sare, is this your boasted British jurisprudence?" A short time ago, in a court in the Central Provinces, a native put forward a claim as heir to some property. Before the case came on for hearing, the head clerk, an intelligent native, thus spoke to the Deputy Commissioner on the subject—"Sir, it is rumoured in the bazaar that the claimant in this case has no legal right to the property—in fact, Sir, it is stated by people who know his history that he is a demi-official son!" Red tape is not so dry after all.—Pioneer.

AN INDIAN VIEW OF MR. VOYSEY.—The Brahmo Journal, the Indian Mirror, congratulates the liberal religious community in England "on having at last secured (in the person of Mr. Voysey) a zealous Theistic preacher, who will nobly consecrate his heart and soul to the organisation of a Theistic community similar to the Brahmo Somaj." Our contemporary then goes on to quote the following passage from a private letter of Mr. Voysey's:—"From India, in the remotest ages of civilisation, came all the culture of Europe and all its religious ideas, nearly all its laws, and certainly its morality. Now India is the first to have publicly inaugurated what will be the religion of many ages to come, until newer and brighter light shall dawn upon mankind. History will preserve this fact, depend on it, to illustrate for the thousandth time that India is the cradle of human intelligence and progress—the East is the mother of the West."

BENGAL ARTILLERY.—By War Office Gazette of March 7th [illegible] see under "Royal Artillery," "Lieutenant H. M. Mackenzie (late Bengal), from the seconded list, to be 2nd Captain, vice A. Donie, deceased." Is this to be another "straw" on the poor backs of the Bengal Artillery? Hitherto it has been supposed that a seconded officer meant one not on the effective list. It has been therefore customary in filling up a vacancy on the effective list, such as in the present case where a seconded officer's name was first for promotion, to promote the seconded officer and the next effective man likewise. A seconded man only being promoted gives no step to his juniors, as his step was obtained when he was seconded. We would ask, therefore, is the death of 2nd Captain A. Donie, of the effective list, to give the poor subs of thirteen years' service no promotion, no step, no advantage of any kind? This may, perhaps, be a mere oversight in the office of the Deputy Adjutant General, R.A.; but officers of the once glorious Bengal Artillery have of late years had so much of injustice meted out to them that they are justified in having their doubts.—Delhi Gazette.

THE FALLS OF INDRAVATI.—Colonel Haig, in his account of his journey to discover the best road to Jugdulpoor, in the Bastar country, thus describes the Falls of Indravati, which must very nearly come up to those of Niagara:—"The Falls are certainly one of the grandest sights in India, though from their inaccessible position few will probably ever see them. The river was in flood within ten feet (according to the people on its banks) of its extreme height. About four miles above the Falls (which are a mile below the village of Chitrakot) the Indravati is joined by the Narnagi, a river of about three-fourths its size. The united waters of the two, swollen by the heavy rains to a volume which I reckoned at about 30,000,000 cubic yards per hour, descend perpendicularly a height of 94 feet over a ledge of sandstone rocks, about 500 yards in length, and slightly curved in place at one end, so as to give the Falls something of a horse-shoe shape. The rich colouring of the water, varying from a reddish brown at the crest of the Falls to a brilliant ochre where more broken in its descent, adds much to the beauty of the sight. The lower part of the Fall is hidden by the clouds of spray, and in damp weather, immediately after a shower, when the air is loaded with moisture, these rise even higher than the crest of the Falls, fill the whole chasm below, and even hide the country on the opposite bank from view, disclosing only at intervals the final plunge of the immense mass of water into the gulf beneath; the scene then becomes one of the wildest and grandest imaginable."

VICEREGAL SPORT.—His Excellency the Viceroy had some good sport on the 13th April, bagging a tiger, besides smaller game. His Excellency sent for the newly-captured elephants and caused two of them to be let loose and captured afresh by the shikari elephants of Sir Dirg Bijay Singh of Bulrampore. On the 14th his Excellency bagged two tigers, four antelopes, and one boar at Jhor Nala. There was still better sport on the 15th at Tilha; the contents of the bag were three tigers, nineteen antelopes, five partridges, five rabbits, one peacock, one musk-cat, two birds.

THE PACHMARRI SANITARIUM.—A correspondent of the Jabalpur Chronicle says that although the thermometer at Pachmarri stands at 90° in the middle of the day, in the shade, the heat is not so oppressive as in the plains. One can walk about at any hour of the day, and not feel the sun. He adds that besides a fine climate, Pachmarri possesses some fine sights of rocks, ravines, and waterfalls. One of the falls is from 500 to 600 feet high, and very grand. The great drawback at present is, of course, the want of accommodation and the difficulty of securing labour, but the water is fine and plentiful. A number of visitors are shortly expected, and Government are, it is said, about to lay out 125,000 rupees on barracks.

A BLACK SHEEP.—We regret to learn that an uncovenanted officer holding a somewhat respectable position in the Punjab, and who lately came out to this country, has been removed from his situation for certain irregularities. The Financial Member of the Council, in recording his minute on the subject, is said to have been of opinion that the plan of bringing out from England young men as probationers in the Financial Department in India does not appear to have proved successful; and that, under the circumstances stated by the Commissioner, he would order the removal of the officer alluded to. The Governor-General, in concurring with the views expressed by Sir Richard Temple, was of opinion that although the officer is a young man of high connections at home, and although his Excellency was personally acquainted with some of his relations, who hold respectable positions in England, he must, in the interests of the public service, endorse the opinion of his hon. colleague.—Indian Daily News.

FRENCH BLUSTER.—The Englishman publishes a letter in very good English from a Frenchman, a M. Lecoq. This gentleman, with safe ingratitude, asserts that the majority of English journals have "in France's hour of need exhausted the whole dictionary of abuse and invective on her. You had not a good word for her. Not one of you scrupled to hit her when she was down. Your comments flavoured of Billingsgate, and your councils were dastardly." M. Lecoq then interpellates the editor of the Englishman directly, and concludes:—"Will you cross swords with M. Aubert or exchange shots with me? You know well that were you to receive a call with such an object you would expel your visitor vi et armis, or send him a summons to appear before Mr. Roberts for an attempt to provoke a breach of the peace." Since then M. Lecoq shows himself to clearly know how impossible a duel is, it is strange he does not see how open to ridicule his attitude of baulked valour becomes. M. Lecoq may be brave: most men are; but the brave don't generally brag.—Pioneer, April 27.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, April 26.—The week which has elapsed since last mail has been one of extreme dulness; indeed, business is now in a worse position than it was at date of our last, prices of the most staple articles being lower. Importers are willing sellers at current rates, but the demand is very trifling. Shirtings, 39-inch, are lower all round, and demand is inactive. For the wide widths we quote lower prices, but these are mostly quite nominal. GREY TWIST: A moderate business has been done in 40's at very low prices, Banner Spinning having been sold at Rs. 4-10, and Kingston at Rs. 5 per morah. COLOURED TWIST continues very inactive.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, April 26.—SALTPETRE: Prices have generally risen, and we now quote refined 3 per cent. refraction at from Rs. 6-15 to 7; crude 6 to 8 per cent. refraction, Rs. 5-14 to 6-12; and common, Rs. 5-4 to 5-12. The stock amounts to 4,500 bags. RICE: The report of higher prices from Rangoon, and a continued demand, have kept prices firm. LINSEED: There has been a steadily increasing demand during the whole of the week, with a slight turn in prices in favour of sellers. RAPESEED: The demand for shipment to Great Britain has continued, but no rise has taken place in prices. Yellow 4 per cent. admixture rules still from Rs. 4-9 to 4-10, and Brown from Rs. 3-12 to 4-3. RAW SILK: The sales during the week have amounted to about 140 bales, at a slight decline. The March bund has begun to come into the market, and native Radanagore has been sold as Rs. 16-8, middling Jungypore at Rs. 15-3, and good native Gouatea at Rs. 15. Some of the filature Silk has been offered, but buyers and sellers have not come to terms.

BUDGET ESTIMATE FOR MADRAS.

The following is an abstract of the Madras Budget Estimate for 1871-72:—

	Major. Rs.	Minor. Rs.	Total. Rs.	Repairs. Rs.	Total. Rs.
Military	1,00,000	50,000	1,50,000	4,000	1,54,000

Establisments				2,00,000	—
Tools and Plant				20,000	—
					48,35,000

In the Secretary of State's estimate for 1871-72, the sum provided for expenditure in England on stores for the Madras Public Works Department is £8,230, of which amount the Government of Madras estimate that Rs. 30,000 will be chargeable to Provincial and Local Funds, so that the sum to be reduced from the Ordinary Imperial grant will thus be Rs. 52,300; leaving the sum available for expenditure in India out of the ordinary grant at Rs. 29,87,700, to which amount the expenditure should be restricted.

PUBLIC WORKS REVENUE.

The estimate for 1871-72 as originally submitted amounted to Rs. 1,16,000, but with reference to the actual receipts of previous years, the estimate may be increased to Rs. 1,50,000, of which Rs. 50,000 may be considered Imperial, and Rs. 1,00,000 Provincial. But these figures will be subject to such alteration as the orders in relation to the items to be credited to Provincial Revenue may involve.

For Irrigation miscellaneous revenue, the estimate for 1871-72 may be assumed as Rs. 45,000.

Miscellaneous.

PRESIDENCY COLLEGE.—Of local news there is little to record. On Monday last H.E. the Governor presided at the anniversary meeting of the Presidency College, and he and his colleagues, notwithstanding the increasing heat of the weather, still remain at the Presidency, with no intention, it is understood, of going to the hills until June next.—Madras Times, April 26.

The Commander-in-Chiefship.—We learn that private intimation has been received at Madras to the effect that the Home Government have decided upon not permitting Lieutenant-General McCleverty to resume his appointment as Commander-in-Chief of this Presidency. In that case Major-General Shubrick will continue to do duty as Provincial Commander-in-Chief till it is decided by the Home authorities as to whether we shall have a Commander-in-Chief or not.—Athenæum.

Carolina Rice.—Dr. Thompson of Tinnevelly has recently made some very successful experiments in Carolina paddy cultivation, and has fowarded to the Board of Revenue a large quantity of paddy grown in the district. It is also said that some further experiments will be carried out next year, when some of the ryots have promised to join in the work. Transplanting is very necessary for the growth of the paddy, and the Indian plough and mamooties were used for tilling the ground. With the supply of water in and about Tinnevelly it is said that two crops of paddy can easily be raised in each year.

The late Assistant-Surgeon John Macpherson.—The Coroner on the evening of Friday last held an adjourned inquest touching the death of Assistant-Surgeon John Macpherson, who died suddenly on the night of Thursday, the 13th inst. Dr. King said that he had examined the stomach of an adult sent by Honorary Assistant-Surgeon Mohideen Sheriff and found in it no mineral poison and no morphia or chloral hydrate. Mohideen Sheriff, Honorary Assistant-Surgeon, examined the body of the deceased, which was free from marks of violence. The heart was covered with fat, soft, flabby, and internally almost empty. He was of opinion that deceased had died from disease of the heart. The jury returned a verdict accordingly.

British Burmah.—There is a steady flow of immigration into British Burmah from the Shan States ; and there are numbers of intending immigrants waiting at Bhamo to get the free passages offered by Government on board the Irrawaddy Flotilla's steamers. It has been therefore suggested that the Imperial Government should appoint some one to take charge of the immigrants when they enter British territory. There are thousands of square miles in British Burmah which only require population to make them productive ; and we are even inclined to think that it would be well if Government would encourage some of the surplus population of Hindostan to follow the example of the Shans by emigrating to the banks of the Irrawaddy. A population of 400 or 500 to the square mile looks very well in statistical returns, and helps to flatter the vanity of a ruler, but the world would be both better and happier if its population were more easily distributed. A couple of million souls transferred from the N. W. P. to Pegu would tend to ward off famine from the former province, while it would certainly increase the food supplies of the latter.—Madras Times.

Military.—The Madras Mail understands that Lieutenant-Colonel Vincent, John Shortland, [illegible] 33rd N.I. will obtain command of one of the wings, and Major Otway Francis Smithers that of the other wing of the 19th N.I., in succession to Lieutenant Colonels Firth and Bowen, who have been removed. Captain Charles McInroy, 39th N.I., will succeed Lieutenant Atkinson as Adjutant of the 19th Corps.—The Madras Athenæum learns "on very good authority that the Madras Government have recommended the abolition of the appointment of Interpreter to the Commander-in-Chief, thereby saving £600 per annum, whilst in Bangalore and the Mount there are colonels of artillery drawing from Rs. 800 and odd to Rs. 1,150 per mensem without a gun to command!"—General Norman arrived in Rangoon on the 19th April, and proceeded to Thayetmyo on the Friday following. It is his intention to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the condition of the province from a military point of view. The Pioneer fancies the "condition of the province from a military point of view" is about as bad as it could be. Its only strength is its neighbour's weakness.

Moulmein to China, Overland.—We are glad to learn from Moulmein that the Government of India has at last taken the first active step towards developing the trade-resources of the country between Moulmein and China—towards doing, in short, for the port of Moulmein, what the Bhamo expedition, if successful, would have done for Rangoon. On Monday, March 27, at 3 P.M., an expedition of a very unpretending character, under the command of Captain Lowndes, left Moulmein in four small dinghies for the Court of Zimmay. So quietly had the affair been arranged that few persons in the town knew even that an expedition was in contemplation. Nevertheless, at the hour appointed for the start, a little knot of men, with the welfare of Moulmein at heart, had gathered on the river-bank to bid the adventurous party God-speed on its lonely and dangerous road. Among them were Colonel David Browne, the commissioner, and Mr. Macrae, town magistrate of Moulmein, while the mercantile world was represented by Mr. Robert Hannay, Mr. J. R. Henderson, Mr. Leumann, and Mr. Valentine. The season which has been chosen for the despatch of this little expedition is not a favourable one. The rains set in earlier in Burmah than in Bengal ; and at any hour in April the wilderness through which Captain Lowndes and his slender escort have to make their way may become a series of mountain torrents and pestilential swamps. However fortunate the expedition may be in reaching Zimmay with fine weather, on its return march it will necessarily be exposed to the full force of the rains. Captain Lowndes, however, declared his determination to push on to the last. The route to be followed is as nearly as possible that which was taken by Captain Macleod in 1836, and is marked down in the excellent printed map published with the other papers by order of the House of Commons in 1869. The expedition proceeds first by the Gyne to Hlineboay in boats, thence with elephants to Koozeik, where the Thougyeen has to be crossed, and thence through the jungle to Maunghat on the Meinam. It will return through the Mineloonghee forests, crossing the Salween at Dahgwin, thence to Pahpoon, and so down the Yoonzaleen and Salween rivers to Moulmein. If all goes well, Captain Lowndes hopes to be in Zimmay by the 16th April, and, after spending three weeks in the capital, to reach Moulmein again by the end of May. Captain Lowndes entered the Madras army on the 10th December, 1854, and came with his regiment (44th Native Infantry) to Burmah in 1857, shortly after which he was transferred to the Pegu Light Infantry. On the formation of the new police in 1861 he was appointed to that service, and had, for some time previous to his present mission, held the office of Superintendent of the Tenasserim Police. A better man could not probably have been selected for the delicate and responsible task of restoring relations between the Court of Zimmay and the British Government.—Englishman, April 12.

Public Gardens for Secunderabad.—Secunderabad, as our readers are doubtless aware, is one of the most important military stations in India. It is the largest cantonment wherein troops are quartered, and with the assistance of the contingent forces stationed at Bolarum, a place four or five miles distant, it can place upon the parade-ground a larger number of soldiers, European and native, than any other station in Hindostan. But not only is Secunderabad a large military station, it may be called a very large civil station as well, since many Europeans and Eurasians, unconnected with the military service of the Government, reside in Chudderghat and Secunderabad. Indeed, if we consider the various cantonments and towns, Trimulgherry, Bolarum, Bowenpilly, Chudderghat and Secunderabad Proper, which are commonly embraced under one name—Secunderabad—it will be seen that the station is one of the largest in the country, even though we leave the populous city of Hyderabad, in its immediate vicinity, altogether out of the calculation. So large a station might fairly demand as its right some place of public recreation and amusement for its inhabitants, but Secunderabad can boast of nothing of the sort, unless a very dilapidated and dreary old brick and mortar band-stand, situated in an ugly corner of the cantonment, can be considered to supply a need which we are assured is grievously experienced there just now. There are no public gardens at Secunderabad ; no zoological collection ; no agreeable rides, or drives such as are found [illegible] the Lal-Bagh at Bangalore ; and yet Secunderabad can boast of an excellent site, far surpassing that of the Lal-Bagh, for a people's Park or public gardens. For the information of those unacquainted with the place, we may explain, that a large lake called the "Hoossain Saugor Tank," lies between Secunderabad and Chudderghat. This lake is considerably larger than the Ulsoor Tank at Bangalore, and is very picturesque, a line of hills running along its western shore. It is, further, of great depth, and is a fine expanse of water even during the hottest season of the year. From the Secunderbad side a peninsula juts into it, which is known by the name of "Brice's race-course," a sporting officer of that name in years gone by having used it as a training ground for his horses. This peninsula embraces a considerable extent of ground—quite sufficient for all the purposes of a large public garden,—and it has a plentiful water supply, the lake above mentioned washing its shores. Unfortunately, it is at present a grassy waste, without a single tree or shrub upon it, but it may be supposed that were wells sunk, the sewage of the barracks and of Secunderabad utilised for the enrichment of the soil, and the ground properly planted and laid out, very beautiful gardens might take the place of what is now a public eyesore. Standing upon Brice's race-course, and looking over the tank towards the south and west, the scene is something more than pretty at the present moment, but if, by a little stretch of the imagination, it may be fancied that the trees and flower beds of the Lal-Bag were magically placed upon it, we might consider it downright beautiful, and far surpassing in natural advantages the public gardens at Bombay, Bangalore, or Madras. An agreeable drive—an institution which Secunderabad sadly lacks—might be easily constructed by the margin of the lake, and there is also plenty of room for a ride on which equestrians could enjoy of an evening the refreshing breezes from the lake.—Madras Time .

STATION TALK.

RAJKOTE, April 16.—A young man of Brahmin caste who is believed to be about seventeen or eighteen years of age, and who was in the Mission School here for nearly six years, applied some time since to the Rev. Mr. Gillespie for permission to be admitted a candidate for baptism. The rev. gentleman explained the nature of the step the youth was wishful to take, and urged him carefully to reflect upon the matter before declaring himself a Christian. He took this advice; and subsequently presented himself again to Mr. Gillespie, stating that he had accepted Christianity as the guide of his life, and begged now to be admitted a candidate for baptism; whereupon Mr. Gillespie admitted him on probation into the Mission House. The friends of the lad having become aware of this, congregated thereabouts, and endeavoured to prejudice the youth's mind against the step he was about to take. As, however, he was firm and determined, his mother and other friends on Saturday last applied to the native magistrate for a summons against Mr. Gillespie on a charge of kidnapping the youth. The summons having been issued, Mr. Gillespie read it, and endorsed on it that he did not think he was amenable to a native magistrate's court; thereupon Cristnajee Luximon, the magistrate, sent the bazaar chowdry with a warrant to compel Mr. Gillespie's attendance at court; he appeared, but remonstrated against the proceeding. He was, however, fined in the sum of Rs. 10, and treated not in the most gentlemanly manner by the magistrate, who proceeded to hear the case. From the proceedings, it would appear that none of the witnesses could state the actual age of the convert, nor could they produce any written evidence to prove it; all they said was, that the lad was born in the year the late Gondul Chief was married, which is about eighteen years ago. On that simple assertion the magistrate directed the convert to join his mother, and threatening to punish him if he left her and went to the Mission House, inasmuch as he was not his own master, and was incapable of thinking and acting for himself. The youth then offered to give in his deposition regarding his age, when he was threatened by both the magistrates and his mother's vakeel; notwithstanding which, he maintained that he was perfectly capable of thinking and acting for himself, and that he was resolved to embrace the Christian religion, even at the risk of being sent to jail. The magistrate gave no heed to the young man's remonstrances, and compelled him to rejoin his mother. Mr. Gillespie protested at such a course being adopted, when he was threatened by the magistrate to be punished; Mr. Gillespie, therefore, thought it prudent quietly to withdraw, but he contemplates appealing against this decision.

KURRACHEE, April 8.—The catalogue of accidents that have occurred at Kurrachee since the beginning of the present year received a painful addition last week. One of the subordinate officers of the Scinde Railway—named James Ronaldson, was spending the evening with a friend at the Travellers' Bungalow. After dinner he called for his carriage, and as he attempted to step into it, the horse—a frisky brute—started off. The poor man's legs somehow got entangled in one of the wheels, and he was dragged to some distance, until the progress of the animal was arrested by the carriage dashing against a gate. Several people ran to his assistance, and finding him insensible, and covered with blood, they conveyed him without a moment's delay, to the civil hospital. Intimation of the accident was then sent to Dr. Hopkins, but, as he was engaged at the time, he requested Dr. MacRury—a clever and skilful surgeon,—to go and see Ronaldson. This gentleman hastened to the hospital at once, and, on examining Ronaldson, discovered that his left leg was seriously injured; the unfortunate fellow had a comminuted fracture with severe laceration of the inside of the calf, and was in great pain. His right leg, too, was much bruised, and one's heart ached to hear his shrieks. With the aid of the apothecary of the hospital Dr. MacRury did what was necessary, and made arrangements for the care of the patient during the night. On the following morning, Dr. Hopkins, in company with Dr. MacRury, visited Ronaldson, and did all he possibly could for him. It was then his opinion that, considering the severe injuries sustained, Ronaldson was progressing favourably. On the fourth day, however, unfavourable symptoms, which no one could possibly have foreseen, came on, and amputation of the left limb appeared necessary; but, after a long consultation, Doctors Hopkins and MacRury decided that he was in too weak a state to undergo the operation, and that any surgical interference would only hurry his death. He lingered in great agony until eight o'clock this morning, when he breathed his last. His remains were interred in the evening. The funeral was attended by a large number of the civil residents of Kurrachee, as also by the officers of the Scinde Railway, including the agent, Captain John Wood. The deceased was a native of Scotland. He arrived here in 1860 in the ship Stamboul, which, on the 20th of May of that year, was wrecked between Manora point and Cape Monze. In 1861 he joined the Scinde Railway. Though naturally reserved and reticent, he was cordially esteemed by all who knew him. By his untimely death the Scinde Railway has been deprived of the services of a hardworking, efficient, and trustworthy servant, and those connected with it will long feel his loss. His widow, it is believed, will be provided with a passage home at the expense of the company.—Times of India Correspondent.

April 21.—The fiat has gone forth, and the works in connection with the Napier Barracks in this station have, for the third time since their commencement, been peremptorily stopped. What has induced Government to stay the works all of a sudden when provision has been made for them in this year's Budget none can tell; but it is hoped that they have at last been awakened to the utter uselessness, not to say absurdity, of constructing upper stories to these barracks, and that the stoppage this time will be a final one. Such portion of the provision made for continuing the works as has not been exhausted might well be appropriated for some useful purpose. The harbour works have already been suspended for an indefinite period, and it is believed that it is not the intention of Government to resume them until the completion of that much talked-of missing link. By that time it is scarcely necessary to say that whatever ground has been achieved towards improving the harbour will be lost, and it is a matter of no small surprise to everybody that it has only now been discovered that such improvement will only be necessary when a direct line of communication by rail is established with the land of the five rivers. To be sure the utility of a good harbour in Kurrachee will greatly be enhanced with the dawn of that day when Sind is connected with Mooltan by a railway, a day which, to all appearances, is yet far distant. But what is to be done in the meanwhile? How can we lose sight of the vast sums of money that have been sunk in pursuing the work for a time and then abandoning it for months, resuming it again, and so on—a little game which has characterised the efforts made to remove the bar, ever since the question was mooted? Such desultory labour can surely produce no solid result. The shipping in the port is diminishing daily, but this, of course, is owing to the universal stagnation in trade. Although cotton is arriving in large quantities from up-country there is no market for it here, for the simple reason that the price asked by sellers is equivalent, or very nearly so, to that obtainable at home and in China. Hence it would be manifestly an unwise speculation to ship the produce with a prospect of realising only the cost, and even this attended with so many contingencies. From this it can be imagined what little inducement is offered to vessels to seek for freight just now in Kurrachee. It is gratifying to find, though, that of late our trade with China has been direct, and not through Bombay as heretofore; indeed, this season more cotton has been shipped to Hong Kong than to any English port.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

THE ASSEERGHUR MURDER.—The two soldiers, Robinson and Picking, have been committed for trial to the Bombay High Court on a charge of murder at Asseerghur.

Miscellaneous.

BUSHIRE.—Colonel Pelly, British Resident in the Persian Gulf, reports as follows from Camp Mandavee on the 8th April :—"Bushire—Cholera is said to be on the decrease at Bushire. Small-pox still prevails. Many of the poor have been provided with food and sent away from the town. Measures are in contemplation for prevention of persons entering Bushire from sea. The Governor has left Bushire for Shiraz."

FAMINE AND CANNIBALISM.—The Jam-i-Jamshed learns that in consequence of the severe famine now prevailing in Persia, a Mogul weaver residing in Yezd, murdered not many days ago a labouring boy, aged about fourteen years, and then cut up the body for food. As the boy did not return home as usual a search was made for him, and after a time his legs were found in the house of the Mogul. The Mogul was soon arrested and taken before the authorities at the place, and ordered to be executed. The same paper regrets to learn that the Persian Parsees at Yezd are in circumstances of very great distress, some of them having already died from severe famine now prevailing in that part of the world. Our contemporary recommends that the wealthy Shetts of Bombay should do something to alleviate the condition of their poor countrymen.

MUSCAT.—Major A. C. Way, Acting Political Agent at Muscat, wrote as follows on the 14th April :—"The merchants of Muscat are making up a purse for his Highness Syud Toorkee. It is expected that 5,000 dollars will be subscribed. A force is being collected at Birka, and as soon as the Rahamaney is ready for sea his Highness Syud Toorkee will proceed there, and move thence through Batinah. Sulliman Bin Syf's force has defeated a body of the Rostak force at Shereea, and is now before Awabee, a small fort situated at the foot of Rostak-hill. Ebrahim Bin Ghes is reported to be in or near Sohar. Sheikh Sala is still intriguing with a view to assist Ebrahim Bin Ghes, but none of the chiefs have as yet joined him. Trade continues to improve. Several shipments of rice, coffee, and sugar have been made for the Persian Gulf. Small-pox is on the decrease."

TRAMWAYS.—The question of laying tramways has apparently been decided in Bombay, at least until the return of the golden age there, The committee of the Bench of Justices appointed to consider proposals of two private companies recognised the advantages of tramways to facilitate the traffic of crowded throughfares, and prepared a plan of lines in the open streets, but expreseed their opinion that the Corporation itself should lay and maintain the tramways. The Bench concurred in the latter opinion, but, remarking that the Municipality [illegible] the work, deferred consideration of the report. The Justices further expressed their concurrence with the municipal Commissioner when he described tramways as a "public luxury;" and, as there is at present a prospective deficit of five lakhs of rupees, a fair inference is that Bombay won't be supplied with the proposed "luxury" for several hot seasons to come.

A TUSSLE WITH A PANTHER.—(BARODA, April 9.)—A few days ago, kubber was brought in that a man-eating tiger was prowling about the jungle near Powaghur Hill. Two gentlemen from camp went out after the brute, with a firm determination to "bag him," as he was said to have killed six men and a boy very recently. The gentlemen were Captain Westmacott, and Mr. Little, the Executive Engineer P. W. Department, Kaira. It appears they roused the animal (which turned out to be a large panther) at or near a village called Jowara. They fired at him, and he fell dead—dead as the gentlemen imagined; but when they got up to him, he suddenly made a spring at, and bit Captain Westmacott about the hand and wrist. Making a second bite, the panther retained hold of the forearm. Captain Westmacott, with the arm that was at liberty, kept "punching" the panther about the head, to make him let go; and Mr. Little rushing up took the brute and shook him by both ears, and kept shaking him till he made him let go Then, hurling the brute aside, he killed him. A sowar rode into Baroda yesterday with the sad news of the accident, when Colonel Wood and the rest of the officers immediately made preparations for bringing Captain Westmacott in. A palankeen was sent out, and the wounded gentleman arrived here about ten P.M. last night. He was conveyed at once to the bungalow of Dr. Ross, of the 4th Rifles, whose guest, I believe, he was previously. The wounded parts are, I hear, considerably swollen, but there is every expectation of a speedy recovery. The natives all say the Captain will not suffer long, but will be well soon, because the panther was killed.—Times of India Correspondent.

THE BOMBAY MUNICIPALITY.—The Bombay Bench of Justices have held no meetings for some time, but now they have been called to action by a stirring communication from the Municipal Commissioner—a "memo." showing a prospective deficit of £50,000 in the current year. As the expectations regarding the yield of opium affected an imperial budget, so has the return from the town duties caused this communication to the Bench. Viewing the yield of that source of revenue in comparison with the "actuals" of last year there has been a deficit during the past quarter to the tune of 80,000 rupees, and the Commissioner thinks it would not be safe to estimate the deficit for the year at less than three lakhs of rupees. Another lakh may be absorbed in the payment of the police, his Excellency the Governor in Council having during the last week passed an Act which will have the effect of stopping a contribution to that amount which was hitherto granted by Government to the Municipality. And, lastly, comes the expense of repairing the leaks in the Vehar dams. A meeting of the Bench was held on Wednesday, when the accounts and remarks thereon were laid before the Justices, but the consideration of the general question of the deficit was deferred until an adjourned meeting to be held on the 8th May, when the Budget will be thoroughly revised. The remarks were chiefly confined to the action of Government in withdrawing the contribution towards the maintenance of the Bombay police force, and, in the course of these, the Municipal Commissioner stated that he had the authority of the Governor of Bombay for saying that Government was prepared to consider favourably at any time a proposal from the Bench for a reduction of the expenditure on police; and said also that in his opinion Government were prepared to carry out such reductions as are possible. This subject also, however, was shelved until next meeting, a committee being, on the motion of a native Justice, appointed to prepare a memorial to Government regarding their withdrawal of the contribution, though few seemed to think that representation would have much effect.—Bombay Gazette, April 29.

A BOMBAY OFFICER OF THE OLDEN TIME.—Another of our veterans, Brigadier General Lynch, K.L.S., leaves India to-morrow, (April 22nd) for at least a time, possibly altogether. General Lynch's varied and invaluable services extend over a period of forty-four years. These services have been rendered not in India alone, but in all parts of Asia. He entered the service in February 1827, and in 1829 we find him marching in command of a detachment of his regiment, the gallant 16th Native Infantry, at a few hours' notice from Baroda, to repel an expected attack of Bheels on the Treasury at Kaira. A severe Guzerat fever drove him home in 1831; and we next trace him in October 1833, riding with despatches for the Ambassador at the Court of Persia from Constantinople to Tabreez, a distance of fifteen hundred miles, which journey he performed in fifteen days—a feat equal to Sir F. Bond Head's rough ride across the Pampas. Shortly after his arrival in Persia, Futtee Alee Shah (the King) died, and the young officer was just in time to take a part in the war of that period. For his services with the army under the command of Sir H. Bethune he received the Order of the Lion and Sun, and was mentioned very favourably by the Ambassador, Sir John Campbell, in his despatches to the Government of India. The war over, General Lynch was sent with despatches to India, but he shortly returned to Persia, where he remained till his services were required in aid of Sir William Macnaughten at the Court of Cabul. He was appointed Political Agent in the Ghilzie country, but when troubles broke out there, finding that Sir William would not listen to the advice of those who knew the feeling of the country and Sirdars, he struggled hard as long as he could in a bad cause, and then resigned his appointment and returned to England. Before doing so, like a true political of the old school, he warned the Government of India in a long minute, which afterwards appeared in the Bombay Times of the 23rd of April, 1842. It is not too much to say that had General Lynch's advice, with that of other independent officers, been taken at the time, the dreadful Cabul disasters might never have taken place. General Lynch commanded his regiment during the mutiny. It was supposed to be disloyal, a havildar and three men having been punished for sedition; the rest remained true, and performed good service afterwards at Aden in 1858, when it formed a portion of the force under Brigadier Coghlan, which captured and destroyed the Fort of Shaik Othman in the vicinity of Aden. General Lynch was thanked in Brigade Orders for his services on this occasion, and specially mentioned in despatches. He subsequently commanded at Aden during the temporary absence of Brigadier Coghlan, and, returning to India in 1860, has been on the staff of the army commanding the Fortress of Asseerghur, and latterly on the Brigade Staff commanding at Ahmednuggur and Deesa.—Times of India, April 21.

RUNNING DRILL AND INSTRUCTION. — The Commander-in-Chief has directed that G.O. 62 of 1867, regarding running drill, shall be made applicable to regiments of native infantry. At the discretion of the regimental authorities, the above order may be modified by substituting 450 yards as the distance to be run in the second fortnight, and 600 yards from the third fortnight, should the regiment have been recently suffering from climatic or other debilitating causes. The clauses of the order which refer to the temporary exemption of weakly men should be largely borne in mind, and the effects of the drill carefully watched by the medical officer of the regiment.

RANK AND PRECEDENCE.—The Commander-in-Chief has ruled that whenever an appointment in a regiment of Bengal Cavalry or Infantry falls vacant temporarily, officiating promotions, except in the case of the gazetted commandant and second in command, should be regulated according to the army rank of the officers serving with the corps; attached officers being considered as belonging to the regiment. If on special grounds a doing duty officer, i.e., an attached officer, is considered absolutely unfit to succeed in virtue of his seniority to a temporary vacancy, a report to this effect is to be made to army head-quarters for the information of the Commander-in-Chief.

On certain points the information given in some published reports is defective; the above figures are, therefore, only an approximation to the truth, and that truth is understated. It is hoped that next year another careful census may be taken of the entire range of the Protestant Missions in India, Burmah, and Ceylon.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Parliamentary Committee on Indian Finance reassembled on Friday, the 12th inst. (the Right Hon. A. S. Ayrton, Esq., M.P., in the chair), when the examination of W. G. Pedder, Esq., on the salt revenues of Bombay, was resumed. The sum of Mr. Pedder's statements was given at the conclusion of our last report.

Mr. C. W. Bell, an official connected with the Customs of Bombay at Poona, gave evidence on the revenue derived from spirituous liquors, opium, and other drugs. He went over the articles seriatim, and described the systems under which the spirit and drug manufactures were farmed under the Government monopoly. The mode was similar to that of Bengal. The witness advocated a new form of excise in Bombay, under which the revenue might be improved, the duties equalised, and spirit-shops better controlled. At present the revenue was obtained under great pressure, and appeared designed to encourage by every possible means the consumption of spirits. It was a demoralising system. When ever the Government introduced European improvements in the distilleries it must be entirely at their own cost, as the native manufacturers could not afford to follow the example. But under an entirely new excise establishment the Government might introduce distilleries of their own, and manufacture for the natives at a price, or charge something to each factor for the use of the apparatus. The witness was next examined touching the opium revenue. The revenue obtained from Bombay was one lac and a quarter, derived from the granting of licences. The loss of duty through illegal cultivation was now very considerable, and probably amounted to double what was realised to revenue.

Sir Donald McLeod, K.C.S.I., C.B., late Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, was next examined on the revenue derived from salt in those provinces. The chief sources of salt were the Kohat and Kalabagh mines, which produced the rock salt, and there was a common salt called the "black salt." A levy of Rs.3 a maund was levied on the produce of the mines. The Punjab mines supplied about 1,200,000 maunds. The revenue was large. In 1868-9 it was £422,000, £378,000 realised from the rock salt. The Government enjoyed a monopoly of the mines, and there was no private enterprise to contend against. The common produce, called black salt, was by prescriptive right free of duty. It was an artificial salt, produced by the people, and consumed by the poorest.

It had been officially returned by Mr. Roberts, who had inquired into the effects of the tax on salt in the agricultural districts, that people could not obtain the quantity of salt they required through the operation of the duties. The Punjab certainly could not bear any addition to the salt tax. It was fortunate that the future was promising; the labour and difficulties of carrying from the mines would be eased by the approach of the East Indian Railway and the State Railway about to be made between Peshawur and Lahore. It was intended to construct a branch line direct to the mines.

The witness next answered inquiries from Mr. Fawcett and other members of the committee questioning our present fiscal policy in India. Sir Donald stated that he had given much attention to the subject, and as regarded the Punjab under his governorship, he had seen the advisability of consulting natives holding municipal or responsible positions upon matters concerning their social and domestic welfare. Following up a municipal arrangement that already existed in the native towns and villages, he would extend the system of native municipal councils, so as to admit European officials. The two authorities thus in consultation would ascertain the real requirements of the people. In a letter addressed to Sir Robert Montgomery, he had propounded a scheme for "consultative councils" throughout India.

The examination then reverted to spirituous liquors. The introduction of the Sudder distillery system had been most unfortunate for the Punjab, as it had destroyed many lives among the Sikh population. The Government had introduced a protective trade which had produced a high revenue at the cost of the decimation of thousands of innocent people who were before unacquainted with the common use of intoxicating drinks. The Sikhs had suffered most, the greater portion of the town population being Mahomedans, who, by nature or their creed, obeyed the laws of temperance. The next subject was opium and other drugs. The witness said that the Sikh population were almost the exclusive consumers of opium.

On Tuesday, the 16th inst., the committee resumed. In the absence of Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Grant Duff occupied the chair. Wigram Money, Esq., was examined on the salt revenues of the North-Western Provinces. The chief source of the salt is the Sambhur Lake in Jodhpore. It was elicited from this witness that he thought a small increase of the tax, say by four annas, would not at all be felt by the people, and would bring in something considerable to revenue, and such increase was desirable, and indeed required.

Sir Robert Hamilton, late Resident at Indore, was next called, and examined on the opium revenue. His evidence was chiefly as regarded the Malwa opium (grown in the States of Holkar and Scindia), and directed to explaining the mode in which it came under Government hands. As recommended by the witness in a work written by him, the Government might gradually withdraw from the trade in Malwa and Bengal opium, and, by a fair mode of taxation, still derive a good revenue from a free trade in the opium. On principle he thought it would be policy for the Bengal Government to give up the cultivation, and depend upon the duties levied upon commercial enterprise, both in Malwa and Bengal opium. We had reached the maximum price of Malwa opium under monopoly when it was 700 rupees per chest. The revenue was a most anomalous one, which was obtained from a commodity grown in one foreign territory, and consumed in another. How could we insure our hold upon such a trade? While native cultivators produce the opium for the most moderate profits, the Indian Government obtain it at such low terms from the native chiefs that it has been calculated the monopolist makes out of every chest of Malwa a profit of 591 rupees.

On Friday the Committee resumed; the Right Hon. A. S. Ayrton in the chair. Mr. George Smith, of Serampore, was examined on the abkari or excise regulations of India. He had resided in India for the last seventeen years, and had travelled much in the country. His inquiries had been directed to the opium monopoly especially, and he had visited Patna and Indore on that account, as he was desirous of ascertaining the reasons for the attacks made against the system of opium cultivation in Bengal in 1863-4. The investigations he had instituted, in the interests of the public, resulted in his ascertaining that the charges made by means of the Indian press against the Government were greatly exaggerated, but nevertheless there was sufficient amount of truth in them to suggest to his mind the advisability of an entire reform of the abkari laws, the abandonment of the opium monopoly, and the imposition of excise duties similar to those of the British customs. He gave lengthened evidence to prove the necessity for the changes he recommended.

Miscellaneous.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN FORSYTH.—The sudden death is reported of Captain Forsyth. He was engaged in passing through the press a new work on Central India.

Denison, M.P., Mr. Arbuthnot, Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., Mr. Juland Danvers, Mr. Thornton, Lieut.-Colonel Chesney, Mr. Goodliffe, Dr. Forbes Watson, and Mr. W. H. Benthall.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 17th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £355,600, and to Bombay, £44,400. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at Is. 10¼d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders at 1s. 10½d. will receive about 1 per cent. Those above in full.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.—The half-yearly meeting of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company is called for the 16th of June, when resolutions will be submitted for the consolidation into capital stock of all fully paid-up ordinary shares, and into extension stock of all fully paid-up extention shares.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—(ISMAILIA, May 9.)—The following vessels have passed through the Canal since the 3rd May :—Strathclyde, s., from London to Bombay ; Excelsior, s., from London to Calcutta ; Bernard, s., from Liverpool to China ; Choice, from Cardiff to Suez ; Jupiter, s., and Zodiac, s., both from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea ; Atalanta, s., from Bombay to Liverpool ; Scotland, s., from Calcutta to London ; her Majesty's ship Euphrates, from Bombay to Dartmouth ; Poonah, s., from Bombay to the Continent ; Durham, s., from Bombay to Havre and London ; Medari Zakfor, s., from Jeddan to Constantinople ; Menzaleh, s., Venus, s., and Samuel, all three from Suez to Port Said.

INDIAN STOCK.—While most other descriptions of securities have since last October experienced a recovery in prices, in many cases largely exceeding the fall which took place at the outbreak of the war between France and Prussia, in Colonial and Indian Railway Stocks there has been comparative flatness. That the recovery has been but very partial will be seen from a glance at the following figures. Indian and Canadian Railway Stocks have shown decided depression, especially of the former, notwithstanding the solid nature of the Indian Government guarantee :—

From these particulars it will be seen that the Indian Lines are scarcely better in price now than they were six months ago, when war was raging ; and that East Indian Railway Stock is even rather lower, though in the interim a dividend in excess of the guarantee has been paid. Scinde Stock appears to have fared the best—a fact which is traceable, perhaps, to the amalgamation of the sectional capitals. Upon the East Indian line there has, during the first quarter of the current year, been a considerable reduction in traffic, and the commerce of India generally has not yet shown much sign of recovery. A revival, however, will doubtless appear before very long ; and, meanwhile, it must be borne in mind that holders are always protected by the guarantee from loss of dividend. At present quotations, Indian Railway Stocks appear to be safe to buy and to hold.—The Financier.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—The report of the directors states that during the half-year ending the 31st of December, 1870, 73¾ miles of additional line between Goolburga and the Kistna river were opened for traffic. The remaining portion (exclusive of the Kistna Viaduct) to complete the company's railway from Kistna river to the junction with the Madras Railway at Raichoor, 14¼ miles, had since been finished, and was to be opened for traffic about the present time. During the construction of the viaduct, which was now in progress, the traffic across the Kistna would be conducted by means of a small steamer and barges. The doubling of the line between Callian and the foot of the Bhore Ghât incline, 30½ miles, was also completed during the half-year. The mileage open at the close of the half-year was 287 miles of double line and 971 miles of single line ; total, 1,258 miles. The number of train miles worked during the half-year was 1,587,925, against 1,252,434 miles in 1869, the increase being due to the additional length of line opened in 1870. The gross traffic receipts amounted to £596,580, and the expenses to £463,579, leaving a net profit of £133,001 applicable towards meeting the guaranteed interest of the half-year. The net profit of the corresponding half of 1869 amounted to £115,503. The number of passengers carried showed an increase of 189,779. The public merchandise traffic of the half-year showed an increase of £26,777. The quantity of cotton carried was 6,032 tons, and 23,926 received, as against 9,955 tons and £36,822 in the same half of 1869. The ordinary expenditure amounted to £410,335, or 68·78 per cent., against £422,268, or 76·94 per cent. in the same half of 1869. In addition to this expenditure there had been charged to the half-year £53,244, of which £25,510 was carried to the permanent way materials renewal fund, £12,580 for extraordinary casualties to works fund, and £13,779 in payment of Indian income-tax, thereby increasing the ratio of expenditure to receipts for the half-year of 77·7 per cent., against 78·95 per cent. in 1869. The permanent way, stations, and other works were efficiently maintained during the half-year at a cost of 15 4d. per train mile, against 22 17d. per train mile in the corresponding half-year. The directors were not satisfied that a further reduction in expenses might not be made in those items, as well as in other charges. A considerable number of experiments had been made with both the Nerbudda Company's coal and that from the Government pits at Chanda, producing, in the opinion of Mr. Hawkins, the locomotive superintendent, very good results, and leading him to anticipate that shortly the company would be able to work all the north-east line beyond Bhosawul with country coal, and ultimately the Nagpoor branch also. The capital account showed that £20,610,242 had been expended, leaving a balance of £3,149,820, including £1,661,232 for stores, &c.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, May, 15.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The House of Commons spent the greater part of the evening in committee on this Bill. On clause 2, Mr. MUNTZ revived the controversy about regulation and over-regulation prices by moving the first of a series of amendments designed to limit the operation of the Bill to the regulation, and to leave the over-regulation prices and the bonus system untouched. In support of his proposal he dwelt on the unfairness with which the Bill treated the officers who did not wish to leave the army at once, and on the injustice to the taxpayers of paying the illegal over-regulation prices. His plan, he contended, would save the country several millions on the cost of the operation ; and the bonus system, he held, would not interfere with the regimental system, and would save us from promotion by selection. —The amendment was opposed by Sir. G. GREY, the Chairman of the "Over-Regulation" Commission, who argued that its only effect would be to restore the purchase system ; for over-regulation prices would go up until the officers paid exactly by private arrangement what they paid now. Promotion by merit could only be established by sweeping away purchase in every shape or form ; and Sir George believed that the officers were satisfied with the general fairness of the arrangements.—Mr WHITBREAD another member of the commission, and Captain VIVIAN, also opposed the amendment, maintaining that it was impossible to ignore the over-regulation prices, and that the bonus system was incompatible with promotion by selection, and would land us in a system of strict seniority and to a renewal of the traffic in commissions.—Colonel ANSON supported Mr. Muntz's plan as the best alternative to the abolition of purchase.—Colonel NORTH, Mr. NEWDEGATE, and Mr. SINCLAIR ATTOUN also supported the amendment.—Mr. CORRY, drawing on his experience of promotion in the navy, warned Mr. Cardwell that he was thrusting his hand into a hornet's nest ; and Sir C. WINGFIELD spoke against the bonus system from his knowledge of its operation in India.—Colonel SYKES, on the other hand, asserted that it was the best possible system, and infinitely preferable to mere selection.—Mr. GOURLEY, Mr. M. CHAMBERS, Mr. MACFIE, and Sir J. SINCLAIR, all from the Ministerial side, spoke in favour of the amendment, and it was also supported by Mr. G. GREGORY, Colonel KNOX, and Major ALLEN.—On the other hand, Dr. BREWER was for some hours the only member who opposed the amendment.—Mr. HEADLAM was in favour of the abolition of purchase as far as regards the payments to the Government, but he held that the payments between officer and officer stood on an entirely different footing.—Colonel BARTTELOT, in supporting the amendment, alluded to a report current that if it were carried the Government would drop the Bill or go out—a threat against which he protested.—Sir J. PAKINGTON repeated his condemnation of the Bill as needlessly extravagant, and, though not without hesitation, supported Mr. Muntz's plan, because it would reduce the expense and get rid of the system of selection.—Mr. CARDWELL, in reply to this, asserted that the Government plan was the cheaper of the two by two millions odd, and argued that it would be infinitely more favourable to officers who rose from the ranks, while it did not injure the officers who remained in the army. The amendment would lead to the perpetuation of the purchase system, which it was the aim of the Bill to put an end to with justice and equity. As for promotion by selection, Mr. Cardwell saw no difficulty in working it.—After a sharp altercation between Sir P. HERBERT and Sir H. STORKS on some point connected with the management of the Reserved Fund, the amendment was negatived on a division by 260 to 195. The further progress of the Bill was then adjourned until Thursday.

EAST INDIA STOCKS DIVIDEND BILL.—This Bill was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, May 18.—INDIAN CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.—Sir F. GOLDSMID asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether, during the present year, there would be an examination, similar to that of 1870 and previous years, of candidates for admission to the service of the Government of India as civil engineers, and whether, after the present year, there would be any and what mode besides the modes indicated in the revised prospectus of the Cooper's Hill College of obtaining admission to the services of the Government of India as civil engineers.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: In reply to my hon. friend's first question I have to say there will be such an examination. That has been always part of our scheme, and the intention to hold it has been extensively advertised. It will be held in July. In reply to his second question, I have to say that certain objections to the prospectus of the Civil Engineering College as it now stands, which have been urged by my hon. friend, have been carefully considered, and it has been decided so to modify our arrangements as to remove any kind of inequality between the conditions under which the college students and outside students shall be admitted to the public service. We propose to allow students who have not studied at Cooper's Hill to present themselves for examination up to the age of twenty-four, and to give them appointments in the Public Works Department in India of the kind mentioned in the College prospectus, provided they satisfy independent examiners that they come up to the standard of qualification which will be required from the college students at their final examination, which will be conducted by the same independent examiners. The first of these examinations will be held in 1874, when the first batch of college students passes out of the college. The Government will of course continue to make appointments to the public service of civil engineers of experience and standing from time to time, as the wants of the service may require.

SOLDIERS' PENSIONS.—Colonel C. LINDSAY asked the Secretary of State for War, with reference to a statement made by him, if he would state what would be the rate or rates of pension to which soldiers are to be entitled if disabled during their six years with the colours, and for what period of time would such pensions continue.—Mr. CARDWELL, in answer to the first question, replied that the right to pensions would be the same as at present; to the second, that if the soldiers could not fulfil their engagements they would not be required to do so; and to the third, that the regulations would be the same as at present.

ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The House went into committee on this Bill. Col. ANSON submitted an amendment the object of which was to continue the present system of exchanges. He contended that it would be in the last degree unjust and ungenerous to prevent officers from making their own arrangements in this respect. Quoting his own case, he stated that when serving in India at the time of the mutiny he was ordered to England, but, preferring to remain where he was, he exchanged with an officer desiring to come home, and by that means both were accommodated.—Mr. CARDWELL reminded the House that the Bill would not prevent exchanges. He fully admitted the desirability of maintaining the principle, but what the Government objected to was the money traffic in exchanges that now existed in the service.—Capt. VIVIAN referred to the fact that exchanges for valuable consideration were matters of every day occurrence, and that "a large bonus" was a common condition. There would not, however, he said, be any objection to allow the payment of fair travelling expenses.—Sir P. HERBERT asked what objection there could be to allow an officer whose health was not good in a foreign climate to pay money to another officer who might like to go to that climate. He also inquired what objection there could be to exchanges from one regiment to another.—Mr. CARDWELL said there would be no change in the general arrangements for the transfer of officers. Adverting, then, to the nature of the opposition to the Bill, the right hon. gentleman taunted the opponents of the measure with not having had the courage to divide the House on the second reading.—Col. KNOX replied that, although the Opposition might have made mistakes, they had never been blown up by a match-box like the occupants of the Treasury bench.—Some observations followed from Col. LEARMONTH, Col. SYKES, Mr. CONOLLY, Major ARBUTHNOT, Col. BARTTELOT, and others, and eventually the committee divided, when the amendment was negatived by 183 to 146.—Col. KNOX thereupon moved that progress should be reported, but the motion was defeated by 48 votes, the numbers being 133 and 181 respectively. After, however, an appeal from Mr. DISRAELI the Government gave way, and the other orders of the day having been disposed of, the House adjourned at five minutes to two.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, May 19.—THE NAWAB OF TONK.—On the motion that the House go into Committee of Supply, Mr. R. FOWLER intimated that, in the absence of the right hon. baronet the member for North Devon, he would withdraw for the present his amendment that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the case of the Nawab of Tonk. The amendment was withdrawn.

NOTICE OF MOTION.—Sir C. WINGFIELD on Tuesday, June 13, to move that a humble address be presented to her Majesty praying that she will refer the case of the Nawab of Tonk to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

DEATH OF COLONEL HAWKINS.—Lieutenant-Colonel Whitshed Keene Hawkins, late of the 40th Madras N.I, who proceeded on eight months' leave last October to Australia, died there on the 7th March.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

YOUTHFUL INFIRMITIES.—With symptoms scarcely perceptible at first, which this restorative medicine would radically remove, the young become prematurely enervated and debilitated. They lose alike their looks, energy, and confidence. The general cause of this melancholy state is a disordered stomach or deranged liver, which Holloway's Pills will regulate. By improving digestion, and purifying the blood, they work wonders. They act so kindly, yet so certainly, upon every organ necessary for healthy digestion, that the nervous system soon recovers, and the wonted good spirits speedily return with strength, vivacity, and vigour. The most delicate may safely take Holloway's Pills. They cause no violent effects upon the system, and gradually accomplish their end without much restriction in diet or pleasure.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, May 6; Agra, May 4; Madras, May 4; Calcutta, May 3.

INDIA herself offers nothing of very salient interest by this mail. Lord Mayo's sport is a well-worn theme already, and no accident befel any of his party in the Dhoon on their way up to Simlah. The tigers appear to have had no better chance of escape from their well-armed hunters than the Paris insurgents have had from the troops of M. Thiers. Lord Mayo reached Simlah on the 5th May. A pleasing diversion from administrative work will be open to him in the archery meetings which Lady Napier and her friends have arranged to hold, in revival of a pastime little known to Simlah since the days of Sir W. Gomm. The latest news of Lord Napier reports him visiting Umballa on the 1st, after a careful inspection of the troops and stations at Agra and Delhi.

BOMBAY is once more talking about the late Gaikwar of Baroda. There is said to be "little doubt that a legitimate descendant of the late Khundirao Maharajah will be forthcoming in due time." In other words the late Gaikwar's widow is once more declared to be pregnant, and the critical moment for ascertaining the truth on this point is supposed to be near at hand. In view of a prospect so disappointing for Prince Malharao, the Hon. Mr. Tucker, accompanied by Mr. Secretary Wedderburn, has been sent to Baroda by the Governor of Bombay to wait upon events, and meanwhile to inquire into certain matters of administrative detail. He was to ask among other things why a system of espionage had been set up over the Post-office. Major Coles, Police Superintendent of Tanna, has also started with his wife for Baroda in order to "provide for the lady's comfort and safety." It is curious that the late Gaikwar should have been married so many years and that no child was born to him during his own lifetime.

MR. RAYMOND WEST'S appointment to act on the High Court of Bombay during Mr. Justice Lloyd's absence has been greeted with general approval on the Bombay side. Mr. Rogers is likely to act for the Hon. Mr. Mansfield as member of the Bombay Executive Council. Sir George Couper will no doubt take General Barrow's place at Lucknow; the latter officer having so far recovered as to be ready for his convalescent trip to Simlah as soon as the weather would allow. It is asserted that the first head of the new Agricultural Department will be Mr. Allan Hume, C.B., and that Mr. Geoghegan, of the Home Department, will become his Under-Secretary. What, then, is to become of Mr. Rivett-Carnac?

IF India is quiet, the din of war is reverberating on her frontier among the Khyber hills. The whole of the Khyberies, women and all, seem to have risen in fierce revolt from Shere Ali Khan. They have already forced him to exchange some of their own party imprisoned in Kabul for his brave old general, Meer Akhor, Governor of Jellalabad, who, ill supported by his Kabul contingent, had fallen into their hands after a desperate defence, in which sixteen of the enemy are said to have perished under his single sword. The hill tribes appear to have been thus far wholly successful, in spite of the help refused them by our old enemy but present ally, the Akhoond of Swat. In their fights with the Ameer's forces many women took part and one at least was found among the slain. Of the cause of this uprising we know nothing. That Russian intrigue has done aught to instigate it is a position which the Russophobists have already as a matter of course taken up.

THE telegraph brings news from Kabul down to the 20th May. At that date Herat was still holding out against Yakoob Khan, and its Governor declared himself confident of his power to hold on successfully against all attacks. According to the Indian papers Yakoob Khan has been striking up an alliance with his old opponent and cousin, Abdurrahman Khan. In this attack upon Herat it is a matter of course that the hand of Russia should be visible to those who believe in the Russian bogy. But there is no need to look so far North for the cause of a quarrel in Afghanistan. In a country where everybody lives in a state of smouldering war with his neighbours, we should rather wonder at any long continuance of general peace.

INFORMATION has been received by telegram from Bombay that the first section of the Wudwan Extension of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company's line—viz., from Sabarmuttee to Sanund, a distance of fifteen and a-half miles, was opened for public traffic on the 24th inst. The first sod was turned on the 3rd November last. This Extension leads into fruitful cotton districts, and will be a valuable feeder to the main line. A further opening to Verumgaum (twenty-three miles) is expected at the end of this year, and the remainder to Wudwan (thirty-nine miles) should be ready for opening in twelve months.

THE Civil Engineers in the Indian Public Works Department have lately memorialised the Secretary of State on the subject of their leave and pension rules. They complain that the civil officers of their department are unfairly treated in these respects by comparison with their military comrades, and that no distinction is made between themselves and the native clerks and lower officials in the Uncovenanted Services. The rules which now press so hard on them were framed for the requirements of native officials who work in their own country, in a climate to which they are accustomed, and who have fewer expenses than Englishmen of the same class. They maintain that exposure to a tropical climate is as much their lot as that of the military officers in their department, and is more common among them than among the officers of most other services. They point out the advantage to themselves of having frequent opportunities to improve their knowledge of European science in Europe itself, and the advantage to the State of any reform which would tend to draw a better class of students into the new College at Cooper's Hill. Among the hardships most strongly resented is the rule which debars a Civil Engineer from claiming an ordinary pension until he has actually served thirty years in India; a rule which presses with peculiar unfairness on those who went out at an advanced age to fill the higher posts in the service from the outset. For such persons no pension lies in prospect, except that which a medical certificate may procure them when their health is entirely ruined. Another sore grievance is the superior rank enjoyed by military officers in the same department over their actual seniors on the civil side.

The sufficient remedy for these and other grievances is pointed out in the following proposals:—I. That the existing Furlough Rules of the Military or the Covenanted Civil Service may be extended to the Civil Engineers also. II. That they may be allowed to retire on medical certificate after ten years' actual service, or without a certificate after twenty-one years, on a pension equal to a sixtieth part of the average pay drawn in the previous five years for each year of service, with £600 a-year as the limit of highest pension. III. That Civil Engineers whose first appointments rank above an assistant of the first grade may add three years to their actual term of service in reckoning for a pension, on the principle already conceded to officers in the Educational Department. IV. That they may henceforth be recognised as a Professional Service, apart from the general Uncovenanted Services, with a separate set of rules, and a proper place in the general scale of precedence.

These demands appear on the whole so reasonable that the needful concessions can only be a question of time. It seems only fair that the civil branch of the Public Works Department should be placed on a level with the military and civil services in respect of furloughs, rank, and retiring rules. It is unwise to keep up needless and irritating distinctions between old and new classes of public servants in a country where nearly all the services are recruited from much the same levels of English society. The petition put forth by the civil engineers would fit in most of its terms the case of the educational and other branches of the Uncovenanted Service. In common justice to the European members of that service, there ought to be a sharp distinction made between them and the native members in the matter of pay, furlough, and retiring pensions. The whole difference between justice and injustice, between efficient and inefficient service, is involved in a wise recognition of the immense difference between the circumstances of a native Indian official and those of an Englishman serving in a foreign country and an antipathetic climate. Nothing can be more unjust or less politic than the attempt to place both sets of men under the same rules and conditions of service. The European must not only be better paid as a rule than the native; he must also, in common justice, be placed on a separate footing in all that concerns his prospects of furlough and retiring pensions. It is only right that he should be free to enjoy his furlough in England at reasonable intervals, and to go home for good on his pension some years sooner than the native who has been serving in the climate that suits him best. If we would govern India fairly let us begin by being fair to our own countrymen, on whose services the well-being of India must depend for ages to come.

In his Report on the subject of girl-murder in the Etah district of the North-West Provinces, Mr. R. T. Hobart considers that in his district direct means are seldom, as a rule, employed to take away infant life. Except among the very worst of the tribes, death is generally caused by the indirect process of wanton or wilful neglect; the slow torture being just as sure, and no doubt a good deal safer, than the ruder but more merciful remedy for an undesired burden. "The number of sickly female children in arms, which were observed, was astonishing," says Mr. Hobart; and all, according to their fathers, were suffering from the same disease. Sook-jat ina—"they are drying up"—was the stereotyped reply. It is only the girls who appear to be thus affected, a fact for which the fathers could only account as "a freak of nature, or the work of God." Is it a freak of nature or the work of God to which the large proportion of illegitimate girls left alive in the same district is likewise due? Somehow or another girls of this class do not wither away in their babyhood, but grow up to enter the households of proud but needy Thakoors. Owing to the continued scarcity of female children in the Etah district, the new rules for suppressing infanticide are at once to be put in force there. It is chiefly among the Rahtores that this curious disproportion of the sexes still occurs, and among the foremost in promoting these "freaks of nature" is said to be the head of the Rahtore clan, the Rajah of Rampore. A similar mode of treatment is about to be applied by the Bombay Government to the Lewa and Kurwa Kunhee castes in the districts of Kaira and Ahmedabad.

We are glad to see by to-day's telegrams that 4,587 British troops, with 1,851 convalescents, are ordered to the Hills for the hot season. The same telegram reports the Commander-in-Chief as being two days' march beyond "Ferras" on the 8th May. Can Ferras be a mistake for Ferozepore?

In noticing the honours recently conferred on Anglo-Indians at home and officers in the Home Department of the Indian Service, we ought to have included the name of Mr. Clements R. Markham, Assistant-Secretary in the Public Works Department of the India Office, and Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. A Civil Companionship of the Bath can hardly be deemed too great an honour for a gentleman whose success in introducing the Cinchona Plant into India was fitly commemorated by the gold medal bestowed on him at the last Paris Exhibition. Mr. Markham's scientific labours during the Abyssinian campaign were also fruitful in good results, to which his subsequent narrative bore satisfactory witness.

Sir G. Balfour has once more assailed the Indian Government with regard to the fallacy started by Sir R. Temple, and since repeated by Major-General Norman, that the Army Estimates for the current year are lower than those of any year since the Mutiny. In his last letter to the Times, Sir George, in effect, reiterates his assertion that the Estimates for this year are higher by several millions than they ought to be, in view of previous reductions in the strength of the Indian Army. Since the year 1862-3 that strength has been lowered by 14,664 English and 10,000 native troops, which means an actual saving of more than two millions a-year. If to this be added the saving of £208,935 a-year on the Hydrabad Contingent, of £74,280 on the Nagpore Force, and of several smaller items on account of charges reduced or transferred, the estimated net outlay for this year will be found to exceed the actual outlay for 1862-3 by nearly three millions and a-half. For the greater part of this excess Sir G. Balfour can in no way account. A third of a million has indeed been ascribed to increased pay and bounties for English soldiers; but the additional twopence a-day accounts for only £168,488. Is it possible, then, that extra pay and bounties would absorb the remaining £165,000? As for other sources of increased outlay, such as the Staff Corps, the Sanitary Commission, Lock Hospitals, Musketry Instructors, Sniders, and Gymnasia, all these "would not go far to account for an annual increase of above three-millions." Where, then, lies the probable explanation? According to Sir G. Balfour, in the absence of independent financial control over the military expenditure in India. With regard to the alleged waste in the stores ordered out from this country, Sir George contents himself with quoting against the Indian Government the language held by the India Office in 1869, about the charge for Indian stores being "entirely dependent on the demands of the several Governments." In his opinion it is not the Home authorities, but the want of proper financial control in India, that is mainly answerable for the two or three millions a-year of superfluous outlay on the Indian Army. A proper system of financial control was indeed introduced by Lord Canning after the Mutiny, and in three years the military expenses were cut down by seven millions. But, in spite of such good results and of the strong opinions held in its favour by Mr. Laing and Sir Bartle Frere, the new department was abolished in 1864 by Lord Halifax, and from that time forth the military expenditure "has actually increased by more than one million," which, after allowing for the reduced strength of the Army, means a real increase of more than three millions a-year, as compared with the expenditure of 1862-3. Of this difference, according to General Balfour, the greater part remains unaccounted for. And so for the present the controversy stands. If no one can readily answer General Balfour, and neither of his letters has yet been answered, we hope at any rate that no time will be lost in taking measures either to explain what the General finds inexplicable, or else to keep the Indian Army Estimates within reasonable bounds. We commend this subject to the Finance Committee, whenever it may grow tired of hearing the same things said over and over about opium, salt, land-settlements, and other like problems of Indian administration.

One good result of the present inquiry into Indian Finance will surely be the abolition of the system under which the Indian Government has hitherto raised and manufactured all the opium sent from Bengal to China. We say nothing as to the alleged immorality of encouraging the Chinese to poison themselves for the benefit of the Indian revenue, because it has been much too readily assumed that the practice of smoking opium is necessarily hurtful to the smoker's health or morals. But we object to a monopoly which places the Indian Government in a false position towards a foreign Power, gives it a special interest in bolstering up an uncertain trade, and imparts to its financial management a strong dash of commercial gambling. All this would be obviated, and the Government cleared from the charge of encouraging what some people call an unholy traffic, if the manufacture of opium were left in private hands, and an excise levied on it in Bengal as in Bombay. That such a change would cause no material difference in the amount of revenue derived from opium, may be inferred from the countenance so strongly given to it before the Committee by witnesses so able and well informed as Sir Bartle Frere and Mr. Smith of Serampore.

The trial trip of the screw-steamer Indus, another fine addition to the P. and O. Company's fleet, came off on the 25th of this month. She is a splendid vessel, of 3,478 tons burden, and glides through the water with a very gentle motion at the rate of fifteen and a half miles an hour. Besides her freight, the Indus carries 1,147 tons in coal, stores, &c. Her between decks are very lofty, and her roomy cabins will afford berths for two hundred first and sixty-seven second-class passengers. She is meant for the Indian line, and will start for Bombay, through the Suez Canal, on Saturday next, under the command of Captain Graves.

The troopship Euphrates arrived at Portsmouth on Thursday last, with the troops and passengers named in our last issue.

Pay of Armourers.—With the sanction of the Government of India, the pay of the armourer stated in G.O. No. 610 of 1867 is increased to Rs. 50 a month as a special allowance. The stationery allowance to be drawn by the officer commanding the "Aden Troop" is, under the same authority, not to be considered as a permanent allowance. The actual cost of the stationery is to be charged for monthly, within a limit of Rs. 25.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, May 30, 1871.

INDIA AT THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

To many of those who remember the World-Shows of former years in France and England, the outward differences between these and their successor of 1871 must seem to tell heavily against the latter. In the first place, there is no central standpoint in the present building, no beauty of general effect, no striking vista along which the eye may wander in satisfied surprise. The Albert Hall itself shows nothing but dark red circles of empty seats, and looks small and dingy in comparison with the great central transept of the Crystal Palace. The galleries running round it may be roomy enough for the necessary display of textile manufactures, in which Germany, by the way, seems to beat all rivals; but there is nothing about them to charm the eye, while the Fine Art Galleries that form the two long sides of the Horticultural Gardens are narrow and badly lighted. Not much of a crowd could circulate through them with any comfort, so perhaps it is well that they are seldom very crowded. In the second place, the arrangement of the things shown betrays a genius for systematic muddle. It is neither fish, nor flesh, nor yet fowl. The handiwork of different countries is neither brought together in distinct classes nor distributed into so many national groups. It is not even arranged in the order of the catalogue. You hardly know where to look for anything except the English oil paintings which line the walls of the Western Gallery, the water-colour pictures and designs which encircle the uppermost gallery of the Albert Hall, and the foreign oil-paintings which fill up the Eastern Gallery. Almost everywhere else the works of different nations are jumbled up together in such a way that the bulk of visitors, who neither invest in catalogues nor pause to examine labels minutely, even if these were always legible, must go away with the vaguest possible notions of what they have seen, and whence any particular object came. You hear people who have just been glancing at some rare samples of Indian art, say to each other, "Oh! those are Persian or Chinese things;" and you hardly wonder at the mistake when, close behind a cabinet full of Indian wares, you stumble on a piece of Chinese carving or Japanese embroidery, or turn from admiring the cameos and carved work of Italy to contemplate a carved ivory elephant from Delhi. If you wish to study the products of a particular country, and find a number of them conveniently grouped together, even then you are doomed to disappointment. You look at one label, which refers you, let us say, to No. 3912, and the very next article from the same country has to be sought for many pages back under No. 2352. In short, there is little approach to any uniform principle, either of numbering or of arranging the things shown, and half one's precious time is spent in turning from one page of the catalogue to another, or in trying, often vainly, to discover the whereabout of something placed out of its numerical order.

After this prefatory excuse for an incomplete scrutiny of the Indian contributions to the present Exhibition, we may proceed to give some account of a collection at least equal in artistic excellence to that furnished by any other country in the world. Visitors to the Indian Museum know pretty well the limits and specific excellences of Indian Art, and the new Kensington Exhibition contains little, if anything, the counterpart of which may not be found in the Museum. But the things themselves are generally so good that we can hardly see them too often reproduced, as a means of educating English taste for the full appreciation of beautiful forms and exquisite arrangement of colours. To the multitude even now, if the visitors on a shilling day may be taken to represent the common run of English folk, many branches of Indian Art remain outlandish or uninteresting, for want of the instinct or the culture needed to do them justice. Even the sort of homage paid to a handsome Cashmere shawl appears to be more a matter of tradition than of sound æsthetic training. There are in this Exhibition samples of gold and silver work and of enamelling which leave our best English workmanship of the same kind hopelessly in the rear; and yet we question whether the bulk of those who see them have any consciousness of the fact. They have heard perhaps that Indian work is pretty but barbaric; they like something more solid than those masterpieces of fine chasing or delicate filigree; they are apt to see something "tawdry" in the loveliest of those richly broidered tissues which only a few Indian princes can afford to wear. Few Englishmen seem to have a natural eye for the pure grace of outline, the classic symmetry of parts and harmony of colour, which form the strong points of Indian as of Italian art. For perfection of form alone what could surpass in its own way the common earthenware Sarai or water bottle of India? In the present Exhibition perfect symmetry combined with exquisite workmanship and fine sense of colour may be found embodied in the Plate and Cup with Cover (2923) presented by Lord Mayo, and in the collection of Claret-jugs, Goblets, &c., (2931) forwarded from the Oudh Government. Both these are fine specimens of the artistic intermixture of gold and silver in the same piece of work, a method far more pleasing in its results than the great masses of either metal under which an English table may be said literally to groan. The first-named are the work of a Cashmeerie artist: the claret-jug, scentbottle, and goblet were wrought by Moonoo Lall of Lucknow. These three have the long slender necks and wide-swelling bowls so characteristic of the best Hindu art. The gold pattern seems to be laid on a silver ground, to which it imparts just the necessary relief and no more. The claret-jug differs from the goblet mainly in having a long snaky handle ending at the top in the body and head of a winged horse.

The Government of Hydrabad contributes among other things some choice samples of gold filigree work intermixed with silver, in the shape of a Box and Vases (3009) wrought by Ramiah Kristnamah of Hydrabad. A richly chased gold Goblet (3008) forms a noteworthy contribution from the Maharajah of Cashmere. A silver Salver and Rosewater Sprinkler (2942), chased all over in rich relief by the Court Jeweller at Mysore, and a Rosewater Sprinkler and Spice Box (2944) in open silver work with a rose pattern, are among the prettiest things of that kind sent over from Madras. Of enamelled work on gold and silver Jeypore furnishes two splendid specimens, a Rosewater Sprinkler (2338) contributed by Lady Mayo, and a Cup, Saucer, and Spoon (2337), sent over by Lord Mayo. Jeypore has always been renowned for this branch of applied art, and these specimens justify the renown. The Sprinkler, elegant in shape, presents a rich combination of red and blue enamel with the natural hues of the underlying gold and silver, and the brilliance of the diamonds strewn about the enamel. In the Cup, Saucer, and Spoon the prevailing colours are red, green, yellow, and white. On the Cup is a picture in enamel of Jeypore city; the Saucer has a band of medallions round it, and the Spoon is an emerald set in an enamelled handle. The enamel itself is of the very best quality, its composition being the hereditary secret of the artisans by whom it is produced. Another good specimen of enamel laid on silver is the dark blue Cup (2339) forwarded from Kangra by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

Very beautiful also is the collection of Indian kooftgari work, in which gold is inlaid on a steel or iron ground. This branch of Indian art-work is purely Mohammedan. Here again the eye rests with perfect satisfaction on the results of thoroughly artistic workmanship. The forms are always good and the tasteful patterns produce a perfect balance between the dark colour of the ground and the brightness of the inlaid metal. Excellent specimens of this kind of work are the two Jewel-caskets (2957) by Nuthoo of Seealkote, and the Jewel Stand and Scentholder (2958) by Nubbee Bux of Seealkote, both contributed by Lord Mayo. Another choice contribution from the same source is a collection of Four Salvers (2,959), the tasteful workmanship of Emam Bux, of Seealkote. The Punjab Government contributes a pretty collection of cups, salvers, caskets, and so forth (Nos. 2961 to 2969), the best of which bear the names of Golam Mohevdeen, Noordeen, Boo[illegible], Orner Bux, and Emam Bux, all of Seealkote. Hussein Mahomed, of Goojerat, deserves notice also for a Sword-hilt and Scent-bottle (2976), likewise forwarded from the Punjab Government.

The same contributors show two sets of Bracelets. The one of delicate filigree work (2994) in golden bosses, alternating with turquoises, set round small ivory paintings, comes from the hands of Ramjee Dass, of Delhi. The other, with Brooch and Earrings to match (2995), is wrought in turquoises and gold by Peary Lall, Jankee Dass, and Chimmun Lall, of the Punjab. Another pretty brooch of turquoises, shaped as bells and hearts in a gold setting (2996), the work of Kesseree Chund, of Delhi, has been contributed by Baron Dowleans. Burmah sends a few specimens of artistic work in gold and silver; among them a very characteristic Cigar-case from Shwegyeen (2926), and a round Box, with cover and stand (2954), carv[illegible] in rich relief. Among articles carved in stone or marble we noticed a very elegant salver of soap-stone (2746), carved [illegible] bold relief with bunches of grapes and vine leaves by Nathoo-ram, of Agra. A group of clever models in painted clay (2755), from various parts of India, gives really life-like illustrations of native trades and callings.

As specimens of carving in ivory a Tankard (3169) carved all over and mounted in silver by a Travancore artist, and a Book-slide (3170) from Trevandrum deserve passing approval. From Shwegyeen in Burmah comes a "Dha" or short sword (3173) with a handle, richly carved in ivory, after a fashion curiously akin to the Chinese. There are the usual specimens of carved "black-wood" furniture, Sideboard, Chiffonier, Davenport, &c., (3105) for which Bombay has long been famous. These may be compared with a carved ebony sideboard (3083) from Ceylon, which in artistic matters may be coupled with her Indian neighbour. A pretty box of carved ebony, with several miniatures in ivory let into the lid (3101), does credit to some nameless workman in the Punjab. Mysore contributes a Box and Pair of Door Panels for a Cabinet (3110), beautifully carved in sandalwood. The marble mosaic work of Agra (2363) and the ivory and wood mosaics of Bombay (2365) also demand our praise. Among many choice products of Indian looms and broidery work, not the least choice is a collection of embroideries (3851) in gold and silver on silk or velvet tissues, sent from Gulburga in Aurungabad. A silver-leaf pattern on crimson velvet and a similar pattern on dark green velvet with a richly coloured border, are particularly taking to the eye. A fine specimen of richly harmonised colour, gold, silver, red, and blue, embroidered on a black ground (3854), and a richly coloured Cushion Cover (3852) with a flower pattern, attest the excellence of Sindian workmanship. Dacca asserts her old renown with some wonderful embroideries on Muslin, Cashmere, and Net (3913); an exquisite scarf for instance of white muslin overlaid with a flower pattern in all sorts of colours, and a piece of black net set off by a flowing pattern of silver leaves. An Indian Table Cover embroidered with gold and silver bosses (3891) must close for the present a list of noteworthy articles, to which further examination would doubtless add many more. Enough however has, we hope, been said to stimulate the sightseer's curiosity and to prove the continued excellence of Indian art in its own particular fields.

BONUS COMPENSATION.

The Delhi Gazette observes that there is one point in this new Army Bill of the last importance to Indian officers. It will have been observed that one of the principles of the Bill is to recognise the legality of over-regulation prices of commissions, and to recognise it in the most practical way by paying compensation. Now it is admitted that the old Indian bonus system had in it more of the elements of legality than the over-regulation price of the British Army; the former was recognised unquestionably by the Indian Government, the latter—though winked at by the Horse Guards—was, as a fact, never officially recognised. Yet it is sufficiently recognised to be introduced into this Bill. It follows that, having recognised it, neither the House of Commons nor the War Office can refuse to recognise the claim to "bonus" of the old Indian Army in the same manner and to the same extent. The over-regulation price, then, of commissions being paid, the full bonus will have to be paid to Indian officers, the bonus, that is, without deducting the sums received in higher grades in consequence of promotion thereto through the operation of the "bonus" system. The deducting these sums, that is, the amount of difference between the higher and lower grades, from the amount claimed for bonus, has already been commented on in these columns and in other places. We are safe in saying that the gross unfairness of making such a deduction has been admitted by all who have studied the subject, and we believe it will not be defended when the matter comes before the House of Commons, as we are given to understand on good authority it will shortly. Colonel Sykes's motion last year failed to produce any result because it was illogically expressed. There was no use in asking whether Lord Cranbourne's despatch had been acted on or not. Of course the reply was that it had been acted on. That was not the question. The question at issue was, whether it had been fairly interpreted with due regard to the interests of the claimants. In other words whether, because a lieutenant had become a captain through the operation of the bonus system ten years sooner than he would have done had there been no bonus system in operation, the difference he received between a lieutenant's and a captain's pay for that ten years should be deducted from his claim for bonus money. It was so deducted, but every one sees, and most people now admit, it was unfairly deducted, because for the difference of pay the officer received during that ten years he gave a consideration, to wit, service in the higher rank of captain, with additional responsibilities and additional work. The fact that the logical sequence of the recognition of the over-regulation price will be the recognition of the bonus claims of Indian officers, has, we believe, come home to that somewhat inaccessible entity, the Indian official mind, and we understand that the prospect of having eventually to pay these claims in full is looming pretty distinctly on the Home Government. It is a subject of congratulation for the officers of course, and for the bonus committee, whose labours will have to be resumed, but not for the country in general, seeing that the money will have to be found, and resort will, we suppose, be had to that ultima ratio of our experienced financiers, the income-tax.

THE PHYSICAL SCIENCES.

The Indian Daily News holds that no one can now-a-days deny the special influences of certain sciences upon the social condition of a country. The neglect of the physical sciences in the history of any people may easily be shown to have retarded, more than any other circumstance, their social and material progress. Mr. Justice Phear has often pointed this out to the Bethune Society, and advocated the study of the Natural Sciences more than the study of Mental or Speculative Philosophy, which extends over a large part of the field of Hindu literature. It is one of the peculiarities of that literature that while it exhibits a high capacity for metaphysical and abstruse pursuits, it shows a lamentable want of progress in science generally, and in the æsthetic arts. One of the consequences is, that nowhere in the history of the people has the aid of science been brought to bear on industrial pursuits; and the material welfare of the community has been thus apparently neglected. The real question is—how is the study of the Physical Sciences to be promoted in this country, amid so much difficulty? An association such as Dr. Sirkar has set on foot is calculated to encourage, to a great extent, a taste for the sciences, but its operations and influence cannot but be comparatively limited. We are, therefore, forced to look to another quarter—to the University of Calcutta, to impart the highest stimulus in this particular direction. And we know of no means more praticable than that which was proposed a few years ago, by an able advocate of the sciences in India, of placing among the stipulated conditions to be fulfilled by colleges applying for affiliation, the condition that they should possess the full means to teach one branch of Natural or Physical Science thoroughly and practically, up to a standard equal to that of other branches of the course. The difficulty of this proposal some years ago lay principally in the absence of competent teachers, and the want of means to render the study more practical than otherwise. But the first difficulty, as to teachers, cannot exist at the present day, when in all the British and Continental Universities the Natural Sciences have, for some time, received far more attention than was accorded to them, say, ten years ago. If teachers are to be had, we see no reason why they should not be obtained at any cost. Every school and college in the country ought to possess, not only such teachers, but the necessary specimens and apparatus to help and illustrate Professorial lectures. How deficient our colleges have been in this matter appears from a report in 1862, furnished by the Sub-Committee of the Syndicate, in which they say that "the institution, which, from its ample resources, has the best means of instructing in this subject (Physical Science), is the Presidency College." But even there no Professorship has been established solely for the purpose. There is a chair of Geology, which, however, is not occupied for the first two years. Lectures in other branches of Physical Science are, we believe, given by the Professor of Natural Philosophy—an arrangement which should only be accepted as a last necessity, as these two subjects are so different and extensive, that to ask a single professor to take charge of both is requiring more than any man should be asked to undertake. Such, then, is the mode of instruction in Physical Science, in the most highly endowed of the affiliated institutions. In some of the others, we may say that it is not even attempted to be efficiently taught.

THE INDIAN MUSEUM.

The Friend of India observes that more than once Mr. Grant Duff has publicly bewailed the fact that one of the most perfect and interesting collections in the world, furnished with a staff of officials for applying its treasures to practical purposes and with so excellent a director as Dr. Forbes Watson, is comparatively useless for want of a building in which conveniently to display its treasures. Yet India has paid enough for the Secretary of State's Office to have secured, had the money been satisfactorily spent, that justice should be done to that Museum through which its scientific, artistic, and industrial products are represented to the civilised world. It was right that no money should be spared on the building which accommodates the Home portion of the Government of India, but it is unfortunate that, after the expenditure of so large a sum, the museum should be either banished to the garrets, or be still locked away in boxes and confined to cellars where it cannot be reached and where its contents are deteriorating every year. The visitor, fresh from the discreditable failure of the Indian Museum in Chowringhee, and having heard much of the magnificence of the new India-office in Westminster, seeks out the latter with somewhat high expectations. Nor is he disappointed as he passes through the lofty gateways and spacious courtyard of the Foreign-office, and surveys the ample corridors, the enclosed quadrangle, the perfect conveniences and the architectural decorations of the India-office itself. But imagine his disgust when he is told that the only portion of the Museum for which there is room must be reached by an ascent of a hundred and nineteen steps, or that he may entrust himself to a "lift" should he prefer that mode of conveyance to the upper regions. It is not surprising that, while ordinary and less attractive museums are crowded by visitors, only 42,545 persons had visited the Indian collections, which are so admirably arranged in the ten months ending February last. The remedy is simple, and it ought to be immediately applied. On the opposite side of the street is a large piece of ground bought with Indian money and belonging to the India-office. Mr. Grant Duff proposes to erect there a proper building for the Museum. On every ground, selfish as well as scientific, the people of India will approve of the small expenditure necessary for this purpose. The Museum, as administered by Dr. Forbes Watson in his important capacity of Reporter on the Products of India, acts as the interpreter of Indian art and trade and skill to the people of England and of English wants to the producers of India. His scheme for providing England and India itself with collections of trade samples has proved most successful. The principal Chambers of Commerce in Great Britain have subscribed some three thousand pounds for Dr. Forbes Watson's collection of the textile manufactures of India, and we trust the system will soon be extended to India with such improvements as English experience may suggest. A list of upwards of eight thousand commercial and economic products of India with their commercial, native, and scientific names, has been prepared for this purpose, and information has been procured as to the productions of other countries available for India. Well has Mr. Grant Duff described the Museum, in this respect, as not a mere collection of curiosities, nor even primarily a place intended for the advancement of science, but as the reservoir that supplies power to a machinery created for the purpose of developing the resources of India and promoting trade between the Eastern and Western Empires of her Majesty, to the great advantage of both.

STATION TALK.

SIMLA, April 21.—I have nothing particular to note except that the influx of visitors goes on daily increasing. But there is nothing like gaiety at present, and there will be nothing till the advent of the Viceroy. The appearance of the Volunteer Dramatic Corps on the 1st will, I suppose, inaugurate the frivolities of the season. There was an accident on the cart road near the band-stand the other day. A bullock was precipitated over the road and severely hurt. The Deputy Commissioner has been a month in the interior; he went immediately after rejecting Mr. O'Connor's petition against himself. On his return to the station he did not go to the Court, but staid at home on the plea of sickness. He has left, or will shortly do so, for the interior, for the purpose of seeing that the road is all clear and passable for the Viceroy, who intends coming across from Raneekhet to Simla over the mountains, and is determined to have some sport on the road. His Excellency will find the road jolly hot, as it is bare of trees, and the rarified state of the atmosphere makes the sun's rays more severely felt than on the plains, though the temperature is lower. The weather has been very changeable of late; we have had several showers of rain, which have cooled the atmosphere amazingly; the thermometer is now down to 62 degs. in the house. A good deal of hail and sleet fell the other day, and some people assert that there was snow mixed with the sleet, and that such fell at Bishop Cotton School and at other places. No doubt a quantity of snow fell on the hills to the north of Simla, for some portions of the range were covered with a white mantle immediately after. Yesterday for about half the day the wind blew a perfect gale. The weather is quite clear and calm, and delightfully pleasant. The Rev. Mr. Crofton entered upon his duties at the church last Sunday; his voice did not appear sufficiently loud to be heard all over the church, but perhaps this arose from timidity on his first appearance. The sermon was a good one, and if the clergyman does not carry into force certain ritualistic practices which rumour ascribes to him, he will meet with a very favourable reception from his parishioners.

ALLAHABAD, April 24.—Wednesday was a hot day, the evening being particularly oppressive. We went to bed, however, with a cool and pleasant breeze blowing over us from the east. About 12 o'clock this breeze rose to a strong wind, and by 2 o'clock had assumed the form of a storm, which continued to rage, accompanied by rain and thunder and lightning, till the morning, when it abated, and the sun made its appearance dimmed by rainless clouds. Thursday also was rather hot, but on Friday, about four o'clock in the afternoon, a dust storm and heavy clouds changed the aspect of Nature, and in a couple of hours rain and hail showered down in abundance. During the night rain continued to fall off and on, and since then this is the first day we have had a cloudless sky. The temperature has gone down considerably; in a house without a punkha or tattie the thermometer stood at 85 degs. yesterday. I have not heard of any extraordinary amount of sickness. The strength of the storm on Friday evening, I was nearly forgetting to mention, was felt more in the old civil station, whose trees, houses, and barracks suffered some damage. A native has just informed me that the size of the hailstones which fell in the district was very much larger than the size of those we were favoured with here. He says they were about two seers in weight each; this I dare say is an exaggeration, but he says that about seventeen lives have been lost from their fall. As this has been confirmed from other sources I have no doubt that the hailstones were unusually large. On Tuesday night Sir William and Lady Muir gave a ball in honour of Lord Napier of Magdala, to which the elite of the station were invited. Dancing was kept up with great spirit till the morning, although the host and hostess and their distinguished guest retired after supper. By the way, the Lieutenant-Governor and Lady Muir had a narrow escape last evening; they attended Divine service at the Scotch Kirk, and during service the punkha over their heads came down with a crash, which startled the whole congregation. The punkha fell between Lady Muir and another lady (her daughter I believe), so no one was hurt. I am told that the punkhas in the new offices have been so carelessly attached to the roof that at one time their sudden appearance on the desks of the clerks was not considered an unexpected visitation. Surely it does not require any great engineering skill for men to see that heavy punkhas falling on unprotected and unexpecting heads are dangerous, nor is any extraordinary amount of care required to prevent such catastrophes. The heavy luggage of the Lieutenant-Governor's camp has been sent off to Nynee Tal; by the middle of the next month the clerks and office records will leave also. His Honour will, I am told, go about the same time. The Rajah of Rewah has taken ground from Government to erect two buildings. One will be a sort of native hotel for the accommodation of rajahs and other swell natives who have occasion to visit Allahabad. This building will be erected on the plot of ground facing the railway station on the city side. The other will be a palace for the Rajah himself somewhere near the Jumna bridge near the banks of the river. A metalled road from this to Rewah with dak bungalows at convenient distances is also in contemplation. His Highness's advisers suggest the running of a traction engine on this road. Why not a railway?

FYABAD, April 20.—The hot season has well set in, but it is not yet intolerably hot. The nights are cool and the mornings and evenings by no means unpleasant. Thermantidotes and tatties are yet more as comforts of life than necessaries, and so they have not yet been extensively brought into requisition. Sight-seers and durbarites throughout Oudh have been greatly disappointed, owing to the sudden illness of our popular Chief Commissioner. Dak garriwallas made, however, a very busy time of it, and for two or three days no carriages could be had either for love or money. A general damper has been cast on the whole province, but the gloom as far as the Oudh Commissioner goes seems to be slightly relieved by the ray of hope of a "step." During the absence of General Barrow Sir George Cowper, Bart., is to have charge of the Oudh portfolio, and everybody in the commission must enjoy for a time a little promotion. There will be no slight difficulty in filling up the Judicial Commissionership, and it will be no great wonder if somebody comes in from some other province. Seniority and judicial ability are both in favour of Mr. Currie; but those who appear to know best seem doubtful about him; nor does Mr. Gore Ouseley, whose claims are all but first, stand a better chance. The most likely man appears to be Mr. Capper, but he is so low in the list. In the same predicament lies Colonel Reid, our energetic and very worthy Commissioner, one of the best officers Oudh has had since its annexation. What a howl was raised, not against him, but against what was considered a glaring injustice, when on his coming back from furlough Mr. Carnegy had to revert to his Settlement duties. Well, all parties must now be happy, for Mr. Carnegy is once more a Commissioner, though not in Fyzabad. Nobody is going to act as his locum tenens, Mr. Woodburn, C.S., doing all the Settlement work of the district himself. The Ramnaomni festival passed off quietly, as usual. The number of pilgrims from the different parts of the country was as large, if not larger, than in other years; but the police arrangements were excellent, and though the Mahomedans were in the height of their Mohurrum excitement, no casualty has been reported, nor has there been any necessity of telegraphing to the Inspector General of Police for his assistance. Oudh appears to be very under-officered at present, as far at least as the police department is concerned, for we see a native inspector, Ram Narain, acting as District Superintendent of Police of Sultanpore during the absence on leave of Major Shaw. The Pioneer thinks this is the first appointment of the kind. I beg to contradict him. The first appointment of the kind, as far as my memory serves me, is that of Baboo Jagadish Mukerjee, for some time at Khoolnea in Bengal. Another Bengali gentleman got a similar appointment, but I cannot exactly say his whereabouts. There is however a little difference in the Bengal and Oudh appointments. The Bengali officers were educated men, but Mr. Ram Narain can hardly, I am told, sign his name in English. Railway works are progressing, though not so rapidly as the public were led to expect. I believe I am not far off the mark when I say that the line will not open for traffic before the close of the year. The permanent way has been laid nearly as far as Rudowli, half the way up to Lucknow, and engines and trollies carrying men and materials are continually moving up and down. But a thorough change in the whole plain has deferred all hope and made the heart sick. The railway department here lost a few days ago a very valuable officer in Mr. Baker, of the store department. The deceased was of a very gentle nature and amiable disposition, and a large number of friends and relations mourn his death. The deputy chief engineer, Oudh and Rohilcund Railway, was here a few days ago with his office. They have all marched towards the Benares terminus, and on their return after two months the office of the chief engineer will be removed here, and Mr. Hederstedt will be permanently located here till the line opens. The weighing of opium has commenced. The civil authorities this time are up and doing. The assamis who bring opium, and very often pestilence and death, are prohibited from entering the city or cantonment. The municipal chuprasees should however have their eyes open, for I see now and then some stragglers both in the town and the military lines. Is it not possible to carry on the weighing outside the city altogether?—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

ARCHERY AT SIMLA.—Archery, which since the time of Sir William Gomm has never really flourished in Simla, is now, says the Pioneer, to be resuscitated. Lady Napier and several other ladies, in co-operation with some active members of the United Service Club, are taking a warm interest in the institution of a toxopholite club.

Miscellaneous.

CIVIL.—Mr. G. Hart will act as Private Secretary to Sir Richard Temple on the return of that eminent financier from Srinuggur.

MEDICAL.—The Station of Punchmurree is to be included in the Allahabad circle of medical superintendence.

ECCLESIASTICAL.—The Rev. Mr. Grant, of the General Assembly's Institution at Calcutta, is compelled to leave the country at once, under medical advice. His health has quite broken down.

A NEW MAGAZINE.—The Rev. John Fordyce has undertaken the editorship of a monthly magazine at Simla, to be called "Mountain Echoes." The first number was to appear on the 15th April.

THE RAJAH OF NABHA.—The Mofussilite states that his Highness the Rajah of Nabha has had a relapse, and is again dangerously ill.

DEATH OF LEHNA SINGH.—The death of Sirdar Lehna Singh, Nazum of Rajpoora, in the territories of his highness the Maharajah of Puttiala, is announced.

A BOLD BENGALEE.—A Bengalee reformer, named Baboo Sasi Pershad Banerjee, has left Calcutta for a visit to England with his wife.

LORD NAPIER OF MAGDALA arrived at Umballa on Monday, May 1, and inspected the whole of the troops on the brigade parade-ground, expressing himself gratified with their smart appearance and excellent discipline.

GENERAL BARROW.—The Chief Commissioner of Oudh was to have left Lucknow for Simla on Wednesday, May 3. The rich men of Lucknow are still distributing large sums in money and food to the poor of the city, in gratitude for the recovery of General Barrow.

THE NEW DEPARTMENT.—Mr. Allan Hume, C.B., will be the first head of the new Agricultural Department. It is now probable also that Mr. Geoghegan, Under Secretary, will be detached from that department to strengthen the Agricultural.

NANCOWRY.—The Governor-General in Council observes that Nancowry is the well-known and long-used name of the harbour, and accordingly desires that it should be adopted as the name of the new Settlement at the Nicobars.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN NUGENT.—We regret to learn from the Pioneer of the death at Murree of Captain W. S. Nugent, Adjutant 2nd Regiment Punjab Infantry Frontier Force. This officer died of consumption after a short illness. The disease was originally engendered at Kohat, brought on by several successive attacks of the deadly fever for which that station and Peshawur are so unfortunately famous.

POLYGAMY.—At the last meeting of the Sanatana Rakshini Sabha in Calcutta, the question of polygamy was warmly discussed by those present. The reformers are said to have had the best of the argument, and the president admitted the necessity of conforming to the times. The question is to be taken up again at the June meeting of this Society, which is said to be a conservative one.

MILITARY ACCOUNTS.—The Bengal Military Accountant's-office has, an experimental measure (we learn from the Englishman) been attached to that of the Controller of Military Accounts. Captain Ferreau, ordered down from Allahabad, is in charge of the new branch office. If the plan succeeds, the Military Accountant's offices at Bombay and Madras will be placed upon a similar footing. The monthly savinu effected is equivalent to the difference between Rs. 1,200 and Rs. 600, staff.

NEWS FROM CABUL.—Yakoob Khan little more than a week ago was reported utterly beaten; a few days later he had attacked and captured Fort Ghorian, and the feeling of Herat, always strongly in his favour, was sufficiently tempting to cause him once more to try the wheel of fortune.—Two Europeans who have become Mahomedans arrived recently at Candahar, and have been sent on to Cabul, where it is supposed the Ameer will give them service. They profess to have had much experience in drilling troops, casting guns, and other service of a like character.—Friend of India.

SPORT IN LOWER BENGAL.—A correspondent of the Indian Daily News, writing from Purneah, records a splendid hunting tour in the Coosy desert. Equally good sport was met with last year in the same jungles. Here is the bag:—"One rhinoceros, nine tigers, and a cub, two buffaloes, seventy-six deer, forty-two pigs, fourteen partridges, five floricans, ten quails, one snipe, and one hare." The rhinoceros gave a grand chase and afforded great fun. It would have been shot last year but for imprudent firing at buffaloes driving it away. It was found in the same cover.

FINANCIAL.—It is understood that when the few gentlemen (only one or two) who have already been encouraged to accept nominations to the Financial Department shall have been absorbed by the occurrence of vacancies, further admissions to the department are likely to be determined by a modified form of competitive examination in India. Hitherto candidates have been appointed only by the Financial Member or the Governor General.—At the suggestion of the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, the Government of India has authorised the abolition of circle treasuries and the re-establishment of district treasuries in the provinces.

SIR W. MUIR.—The Lieutenant-Governor of the N. W. P. was to leave Allahabad on the 15th April, proceeding viâ Etah, Budaon, and Bareilly to Nynee Tal, where his Honour would probably arrive on the evening of the 20th.

A MISTAKE CORRECTED.—We have been requested to correct a mistake into which the Indian Daily News has fallen, which mistake was reproduced in our last Overland Summary, in stating that the officer of the Financial Department at Lahore, who has recently been removed from his situation for certain irregularities, was "one of those who lately came out to this country." Only three officers can answer the description of having "lately come out to this country"—Mr. E. Gay, Deputy Comptroller-General, Calcutta; Mr. E. Ridle, Officiating Deputy Accountant-General, British Burmah; and Mr. Tudor Trevor, Examiner of Claims, Bombay. Now all of these, we are happy to say, are in the full enjoyment of their substantive appointments, and are justly regarded as valuable officers of the important department to which they belong.—Times of India.

THE NAWAB OF BENGAL.—At last we seem to be at the end of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal's claims, or at least of the possibility of making them good. The Duke of Argyll, after reading a close and telling despatch from the Government of India, finds that nothing stated by the Nawab is weighty enough to overturn the decision of 1864. All that the Nawab gains is that the loan of three lakhs of rupees, promised to him by the Duke in 1869, shall be made an absolute payment out of the Deposit Fund of the Nizamut, instead of a loan. There is no doubt whatever that in the long list of grievances preferred by the Nawab, and on his behalf, some were very real, but time levels even grievances, and the Nawab, defeated himself, may take comfort that after his death his family will be all right, even where he has failed. That ought to compensate for everything. The despatch of the Government of India is very decided and forcible, and the Duke's summing up of the whole reads exceedingly like the "finis" of a story.—Friend of India.

MILITARY.—General Fraser Tytler, C.B., was to assume command of the Allahabad Division on Thursday, May 4.—The titles of Chief Inspector and District Inspectors of Musketry are about, says the Pioneer, to be abolished. In their stead the officer holding the former appointment will be styled Assistant Adjutant General at Head Quarters, while the old District Inspectors will receive the prefix of Deputy Assistant Adjutant General of the Divisions to which they may be attached. "This is one of the great pieces of military reform which are being initiated during the present season of alarm. No real change will be involved; and as the rose by any other name is supposed to smell as sweet, we may reasonably hope that the efficiency of this branch of the staff will not be seriously impaired by this stupendous innovation." The good service pension rendered disposable by the death of Major-General Sir H. Durand was, on the recommendation of the Government of India, conferred by the Home Government on Major General Broome, who died a few weeks ago on the passage to England.

INDIGENOUS JOINT STOCK ENTERPRISE.—The Indian Daily News tells an anecdote illustrating the native idea of joint-stock companies. A cunning native, it appears, started a joint-stock company to trade in rice. He induced the people to believe that if they paid their shares to an amount sufficient to cover the expenses of purchasing rice from the eastern districts they could obtain their daily supplies free of cost. At the end of each year, when the accounts are made up and the profits ascertained, the same would be divided among them. "I got my idea," said the native, "from the sahibs. The Great Eastern Hotel," said he, "has a very large number of shareholders, and they got all they wanted from the hotel without paying for it. Each shareholder was provided with a ticket, and he had only to show the ticket to get all that he wanted." "Capital idea that," said the shareholders, and each paid Rs. 10 as his first call. The great joint-stock company came into life, a large godown was stocked with rice, but as soon as the stock was eaten the company went into liquidation. The projector soon after disappeared. The shareholders now accuse the directors of having eaten too much.

THE VICEROY AND HIS SHIKAR.—The Governor-General left Moondia Ghat for Pillibheet on the morning of the 26th April. He will inspect the head works of the protected canal en route. The sport has been very good, including seventeen tigers, besides leopards, sambar, and gonds innumerable. On the 24th a particularly successful drive resulted in four tigers falling in about three minutes within the cordon which had been drawn round them. "A more picturesque sight could not be conceived than was afforded by the long lines of elephants advancing from all sides, throwing out skirmishers and flankers, now sloping from some impassable quagmire, now stopping to form line, now driven back in parts by some fierce rush of the forest kings, a rolling fire ever bursting out from some position or other of the storming party; the ivy-green grass, nine feet high, furrowed every second by the wild rush of tigers seeking to escape—all this in a deep forest glade, once the course of an ancient mighty river with rounded pebbles scattered beneath in the grass; the setting sun tinging all with brilliant colours, and the mighty Himalayas, rosy red, grandly looming over the trees upon the tumult and slaughter beneath." We have only time to add that on this occasion Dr. Fayrer's professional science exhibited itself in the way his bullets sought out mortal

.ept on this occasion a large proportion of the tigers fell y's own rifle.—Pioneer, May 4.

ATIC SOCIETY OF BENGAL.—The Report of the Asiatic Bengal for the year 1870 bears witness to the healthy con- that association. It is true that during the year under notice the Society lost 57, while it gained only 28 members, thus reducing the total on the lists to 414 (the smallest number since 1866), but the finances have improved, and the demand for the Society's publications has extended over a much wider area than heretofore. The contributions of papers and specimens have also been numerous and regular. The actual income for the year has exceeded the estimate by Rs. 745, while that of the expenditure has been reduced by Rs. 582, which, added to the balance of Rs. 1,540, left to the credit of the society at the close of 1869, makes the grand total of cash in hand (apart from the reserved fund in Government Securities of Rs. 2,000) Rs. 2,867. This sum will be found of great use duing the present year, when it is proposed to improve the Society's building, and to enlarge the accommodation for the library. The president elected for 1871 is the Hon. Mr. Justice Phear; the vice-presidents are Dr. Oldham, Lord Napier of Magdala, and Baboo Rajendralala Mittra; and the secretaries, Colonel Hyde, R E., Mr. Blochmann, and Dr. Stoliczka. The members of the Council are the president, the vice-president, the secretaries, Dr. W. W. Hunter, Colonel Thuillier, R.A., Messrs. Blandford, Atkinson, and Gay, Dr. Ewart, Dr. Innis, and Baboo Davendra Mallika.—Pioneer.

LORD NAPIER OF MAGDALA AT AGRA.—His Excellency Lord Napier of Magdala left Agra for Delhi by the 10.20 train on the evening of Wednesday; the salute due to his rank was fired on the following morning. He arrived on the evening of the 22nd. During his stay in Agra his Excellency closely inspected the garrison and all connected with it. On the morning of the 23rd, Sunday, after divine service, he visited the hospitals of the Royal Artillery and the 65th, minutely inspecting both; from thence he went to the hospitals of the two N I. corps, the 1st and 40th. On the following morning, the 24th, he had the 1st N.I. on parade from 5-15 to 8 A.M., and in the evening the 40th N.I. from 5-15 till it was quite dark. The morning of the 25th was devoted to a close inspection of the recently arrived 65th. The barrack-rooms were then closely examined; and the regiment was then ordered to parade, and was put through several manœuvres till 7-15 A.M. In the evening at 5 o'clock his Excellency visited the fort. He was met at the Delhi gate by the Staff, &c., and by Mr. Furnival, C.E., of the Rajpootana State Railway, who explained the course the railway would take on its approach to the fort. His Excellency then went round the ramparts, visited the barracks and the military prison, and inspected the company of the 65th and the Garrison Battery (7-22nd R.A.). On the morning of the 26th all the troops turned out at 5-15 A.M. for brigade exercise. After marching past the force was put through a few movements by the Brigadier General. The infantry portion then marched away, leaving the F-19 R.A. for inspection. On the evening of the 26th Lord Napier visited the Roman Catholic Institution. The visit was quite of an unofficial character, but it was not forgotten that many orphans of gallant soldiers have found a home there, and are being educated to be useful members of society.—Delhi Gazette, April 29.

THE WAR IN THE KHYBER.—The Mir Akhor, who was recently taken prisoner by the Khyberees, has been released after a short imprisonment. The Amir of Cabul was obliged to exchange for him the Khyberee prisoners who had been seized and sent to Cabul. As we lately announced, a severe battle took place on the 16th (? 15), in which the Cabul troops behaved so shamefully as to provoke the laughter of their enemies. General rejoicings went on among the Khyberees, who have dubbed Mir Akhor as ahmuk ka-beta (the son of a fool). When Mir Akhor reported the affair to the Amir, the Amir asked him how it was that he had not mentioned in his despatches Sultan Mahomed Khan, who was well known for his personal strength and courage. The Mir Akhor replied that he had taken no part in the fight! Inquiry was then made of Sultan Mahomed himself, who replied that the Amir's order came to Mir Akhor, and not to him, and that if he had joined in the battle he might have been killed in doing what was no duty of his, and his family and friends left without a protector. Of course his only motive was jealousy of the Jellalabad Governor, and his conduct seems to have been rather peculiar, like some of the Highland clans at Culloden. The Amir at once sent orders to the Sultan to march with his troops and co-operate against the Khyberees, and the Amir himself has forwarded large stores of ammunition and provisions on camels to the front. Three thousand men are repairing the road between Ali Musjid and Jumrood, and appointing stages every three kos, at each of which twenty sowars are stationed. They receive Rs. 32 per month, which is double the ordinary pay. If any combination is to be made it must be done by the Amir himself, as it is plain his generals are jealous of each other and are, perhaps, incompetent. He ordered Mir Akhor after his defeat to withdraw his army in the direction of Cabul and report himself personally immediately. The Sirdars Shere Dil Khan, Mahomed Hoosein and others remonstrated with the Amir on this order. They represented that things were bad enough already, but if he recalled his troops and punished a general, the people of Cabul would be inclined to ridicule his army, which would itself be disheartened. His own reputation, also, would be lessened throughout the world. To this the Amir moodily made no reply. He has of late been attacked by fits of despondency, which have been increased by bad news from the West. —Indian Public Opinion, April 28.

AN EASTERN DARWIN.—A propos of Darwin's latest book, it would seem that there is nothing new under an Eastern sun. In the course of our reading, we came, the other day, across a curious character in the person of a Muhammadan saint of the name of Mahmúd. This Darwinius prior, who lived in the time of Timúr, about A.D. 1400, in a village in Gilan, near the Caspian Sea, issued a fatwah—an article which has become pretty well known to our readers lately—and in which the Muhammadan soul rejoices. This fatwah was to the effect that with him, Mahmúd, the Islamitic dispensation had come to an end. The Muhammadans have found passages in the Bible in which the coming of Muhammad is foretold, and Mahmúd discovered a verse in the Koran in which his advent was indisputably predicted. He had only, of course, to announce his divine mission and personality, to attract round him a large number of disciples, and this number increased so rapidly and to such an extent that the Persian Government took serious alarm, and the Mullas denounced Mahmud as an arch-heretic. With all this and his peculiar tenets we have no immediate concern at present, but his ideas on Creation are of some interest at this time. He maintained that the notions on this subject entertained by the mankind of his day were derived from so many myths. The alpha of Creation was, he said, an atom of earth, or, as he calls it, "nuktah-i-khak," (Query—protoplastic jelly ?). This atom of earth, which seems to have had the mark of the Beast on it, underwent strange changes, and in course of time became spread abroad in the shape of plants; the plants by gradual development became animals, and to this class belongs Man. But not rapidly did this grand result ensue, for we are told that when man had sufficiently developed himself, so as to form a distinct species, the "human form divine" was still very imperfect (gorilla-like ?). Since then, however, it had been gradually throwing off impurities and advancing in glory generation after generation, until it reached its perfection in the person of Mahmud, with whom Islam came to an end. This is Mahmud's "Ascent of Man," and it affords abundance of food for speculation to philosophers who love to moralise on such matters. If there be any truth in the theory of the transmigration of souls, Darwin's alter ego seems to have existed some five hundred years ago near the shores of the Caspian. That this Mahmud found supporters neither few nor lukewarm is proved by the fact that his idea spread so rapidly that, though persecuted with fire and sword, his disciples still existed towards the end of the sixteenth century, when the last of them came to India, and was protected by Akbar.—Englishman.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 3.—We have still to report a continuance of the dulness which has so long been the rule in this market, and though in a few instances a slight improvement may have taken place, the aggregate of transactions is exceedingly limited. GREY SHIRTINGS: At the lower quotations for 39-inch, a moderate business has been transacted since our last. In 45-inch a few small transactions are reported at about quotations; 60-inch to 60-inch are neglected. JACCONETS, low to medium makes, have been saleable to a fair extent at last mail's rates. BLEACHED Goods are generally quiet, except JACCONETS, which are moderately saleable. GREY TWIST: After our last a better demand began to be experienced for 40's, and a fair business has since been done at, in some cases, slightly firmer rates; other numbers are dull, and generally lower. COLOURED TWIST remains very dull indeed.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 3.—SALTPETRE: There has been a fair demand both for Europe and America during the week, but prices have not risen to any great extent, owing to large arrivals, the stock having risen to about 8,500 bags. RICE: There has been a slight rise in prices, owing more to supplies having come in, but slowly, rather than to any increased demand. LINSEED: The demand both for England, America, especially the latter, has been sufficient to cause a slight rise in prices, to which the small supplies on hand have also contributed. RAPESEED: There has been a good steady trade done during the week, but without any alteration in prices, though the tendency is, if anything, downwards. POPPYSEED: A few contracts have been entered into for the new crop for delivery in one or two months at Rs. 4-2 to 4-3. RAW SILK: The market continues in a very unsatisfactory state. In Calcutta there are so few purchasers that producers are shipping on their own account. Lyalls and Watsons are asking Rs. 23-8 for their Rangamultys and Surdahs, but without effecting a sale. Fifty-two bales of the March bund—Ranganatty, Gonatea, and Rangetty—have been sold at from Rs. 22 to 22-8, and some native Jungypore and Cossimbazar at from Rs. 15 to 16-8. CORAHS: There have been a few corges shipped on native account, owing to the impossibility of finding purchasers at the present market rates. The stocks still continue large.

Madras.

JUDICIAL.—It is understood that the Madras Chief Justice has intimated to the Home authorities his intention to retire from the service by the end of the current year.

PONDICHERRY.—M. Bontemps, the ex-Governor of Pondicherry, returns to France on the 7th of May. During his tenure of office he has accomplished many improvements in the colony.

ACCIDENT TO COLONEL PEARSE.—We regret to learn from the Madras Times that Lieut.-Colonel G. G. Pearse, of the Royal Artillery at Cannanore, has met with a sad accident in the racket-court of that station, where he was hit by a ball with great force on the left eye. It is feared that the sight of the eye will be affected.

DEATH OF MAJOR HAINES.—The Bangalore Herald regrets to have to record the death of Major Haines, formerly of the 9th M.N.I., and latterly attached to the Mysore Commission. "In his younger days, he was considered one of the best and smartest adjutants in the service, and his handsome commanding presence was all in his favour. His death will be sincerely regretted by many."

THE COAST OF AVA.—The storm which threatened in British Burmah seems to have blown over. His Majesty has repudiated any intention of departing from the principles of free trade, and though he has virtually monopolised the trade in piece-goods, his commercial subjects have recovered from their alarm. The Political Agent at Mandalay reports that his Majesty's conduct is in every way most satisfactory.

THE NEW COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—The following is the despatch of the Secretary of State to the Madras Government, appointing a successor to General McCleverty in the command of the Madras ARMY:—"India Office, London, April 4, 1871.—My Lord,—I have to inform your lordship that, in consequence of the information received from you by telegraph, of the departure of Lieutenant-General W. A. McCleverty from Madras, with the intention of returning to England, her Majesty has been pleased to approve of Major-General Frederick Paul Haines being placed on the Staff of the army in India, with a view to his succeeding to the command of the troops in the Madras Presidency, with the local rank of Lieutenant-General."

EXPLORATION IN EASTERN BURMAH.—The Englishman reports excellent progress on the part of the expedition to Zimmay which reached Hmineloongyee on the 7th of April, the twelfth day after starting, without having met with any mishaps or delays. They appear to have found the road generally good; but between the Thoungyin and the Mayngaw Nullah it crosses some steep hills and a stony ravine. The highest point reached was, by the barometer, nearly 2,000 feet above the Thoungyin. Captain Lowndes, however, fears the route would be a difficult one for a railroad. The country is reported to be disturbed. Karennees from the West were on their way to attack the Thitgoungs; and Kolan with 3,000 men was threatening to make a raid on Hmineloongyee or on Zimmay. A large force was expected from Zimmay in a day or two.

MAULED BY A TIGER.—A very serious accident happened on the 21st of April to a young coffee planter, Mr. A. Allardice, in the Kudoor district, while out tiger shooting. The animal had been shot and apparently killed, when all the party approached to examine it. Suddenly it sprang up, knocked Mr. Allardice over and rolled with him some thirty feet down a steep hill till stopped by a tree. Here it tried to seize him by the neck, but he interposed his right hand, which it caught in its teeth and worried. By this time the Gowdas approaching drew off its attention, it released the hand, and its victim tried to roll from under it. This motion again attracted its notice, and it seized him by the boot. Fortunately, however, its strength was almost spent, it tore the boot but missed the foot, and a desperate kick in the face sent it rolling to the bottom of the hill. Mr. Allardice is a good deal clawed on the back and left arm, and his right hand and wrist are dreadfully gashed and mangled, the fangs having passed quite through the back and palm, breaking the bones of the middle finger. The apothecary at Chickmagloor (thirty-five miles distant) was at once sent for, and Mr. Allardice was taken to his brother's bungalow at Baloor. He has since been carried into Chickmagloor, and is happily doing very well.—Bangalore Herald, May 2.

Persian Gulf.—The Political Resident in the Persian Gulf, writing on the 8th April, reports a rumour at Bushire of the plague having shown itself at Deyer, a port situated some ninety miles to the southward of Bushire, and states his unprofessional impression that the cholera now prevailing is in its origin attributable to the famine from which the neighbourhood of Bushire has suffered.

The Water Supply of Bombay.—The Indian Daily News hears that "on the recommendation of the Bombay Government, the Supreme Government has sanctioned the grant of a loan of Rs. 250,000 to the Bombay municipality, with a view to enable that corporation to carry out certain works connected with the water supply of the town, subject to the confirmation of the Secretary of State. The amount is to be repaid in twelve years by an instalment of about Rs. 20,800 a year."

Death of Captain G. Baillie.—We regret to learn of the death at Mhow, on the night of the 27th April, of Captain George Baillie, Executive Engineer at that station. W. Provinces, and the Punjab, and to submit a report on the said reductions, for transmission to the India House. The Government is said to have desired that the subordinate establishement in that department should be reduced with a view to lessen expenditure, and where there are two Divisional Executive Engineers in close proximity to each other, one of them should be abolished, and the two divisions of the Public Works, so situated, should be amalgamated.

MILITARY FURLOUGH RULES—APPEAL OF LIEUT.-COL. ROBERTS.

No. 173.—The following is published in the Public Works Department:—

Military Department, Fort William, March 27.—From the Right hon. the Secretary of State for India to his Excellency the right hon. the Gov. gen. of India in Council, No. 47, dated India-office, London, Feb. 16, 1871.

Para. 1. Your letter, No. 335, dated Dec. 7, 1870, reports your having decided, with reference to an appeal from Lieut. col. R. Roberts, Royal (Madras) Engineers, that service in India alone can entitle an officer of Royal Engineers to furlough under Indian Rules.

2. This decision is in accordance with my despatch of March 24, 1870, No. 81, and is confirmed.

3. I also approve of your having ruled that an engineer officer of the imperial list, who, after completing a period of seven years' service in India, may serve for a time out of India, and then return for a second tour, shall be entitled to take a furlough after a service of one year from date of return.

STAFF CORPS.

The following extract from paragraph 3 of a military letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, No. 43, dated February 9, 1871, is published in the Gazette:—

"Paragraph 3. I observe that it is the practice of your Government, in recommending for admission to the staff corps officers who are attached to native regiments, to furnish a copy of the certificate of the commanding officer as to their conduct while on probation with the regiment, and of the medical certificate obtained at the completion of the period of probation; but this rule is not always followed by the Madras and Bombay Governments, nor by your lordship in the case of officers nominated to departmental staff appointments. It is desirable that a copy of these certificates should in all cases be transmitted to her Majesty's Government, as well as of the certificates furnished by the candidate before his appointment on probation; and I request that instructions to this effect may be communicated to the Governments of Madras and Bombay."

STATION STAFF APPOINTMENTS.—With reference to G.O. No. 195, dated March 21, 1867, the station staff appointment at Malligaum will in future be fourth class.

RETIREMENT ARRANGEMENTS.—H.E. the Governor-General in Council has directed that military officers employed in departments, and medical officers who may desire to retire from the service shall, in all cases, submit their applications to retire to the adjutant general through the heads of their departments.

ALLOWANCES TO VETERINARY SURGEONS.—The Government of India has fixed a consolidated rate of office allowance for the principal veterinary surgeon in Bengal and for the inspecting veterinary surgeons in the three Presidencies, in the following proportions, viz., Rs. 80 a month for the former, and Rs. 60 a month for each of the three inspecting surgeons.

WARRANT MEDICAL OFFICERS.—The following paragraph of a military letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, No. 71, dated March 2, is published:—Para. 15. I approve of the rule which you have laid down, that warrant medical officers shall, on attaining the age of fifty-five, be examined as to fitness, and, if reported qualified, retained for three years, retirement being then compulsory.

OFFICERS OF ROYAL ENGINEERS FURLOUGH.—It has been decided by the Government of India, that service in India alone can entitle an officer of royal engineers to furlough under Indian rules. It has been further ruled that an engineer officer of the Imperial list, who, after completing a period of seven years' service in India, may serve for a time out of India, and then return for a second tour, shall be entitled to take a furlough after a service of one year from date of return.

UNCOVENANTED MEDICAL OFFICERS.—In Financial Resolution No. 2,599, dated September 17, 1867, it was laid down that the service of an uncovenanted medical officer towards the periodical increments in the revised scale of pay for his class, will reckon from the date of his entering on his duties, on his first permanent appointment to the medical charge of the Sudder Station of a District, if the incumbent was not then a sub-assistant surgeon, otherwise from the date on which he ceased to be a sub-assistant surgeon. This rule shall continue in force for sub-assistant surgeons who may hereafter be promoted to the status of uncovenanted medical officer; but all who are now serving on the footing or status of uncovenanted medical officers, who previously held permanent medical charge of the Sudder Stations of Districts as sub-assistant surgeons, are allowed to count such service towards the periodical increments of their pay as uncovenanted medical officers.

LEAVE TO TELEGRAPH SERVANTS.—The Director General of Telegraphs in India has been authorised to grant privilege leave to members of the telegraph establishments, and to notify the same in the Gazette of India.

THE FOREIGN OFFICE.—During the absence of H.E. the Viceroy and Governor general in Council from the Presidency, the officiating secretary to the Government of India in the military department at the Presidency will have charge of that portion of the Foreign-office which is left at the Presidency.

LEAVE AND ALLOWANCES.—The Governor-general in Council directs that Rule 5 under section 26 of the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code be struck out, and that the following rule be added as No. 3 to Chapter 13 of that Code:—"An officer permitted to return to duty before the expiry of his leave should have the unused part of his leave formally cancelled by the authority which granted it." This rule applies generally.

NON-COMBATANTS AND WAR MEDALS.—The following paragraphs of a military letter from the Right Hon. the Sec. of State for India, No. 62, dated Feb. 23, 1871, are published for general information:—"5. Non-combatants who are attached permanently to regiments or departments are entitled to participate in the grant of war medals, provided it can be certified by officers cognisant of their services that they were actually under the fire of the enemy in the performance of their duty. 6. Applications from non-combatants, as described above, for the medals granted for services in Bootan, or on the North-West Frontier of India, and in Abyssinia, should be dealt with in accordance with this decision."

VETERINARY CHARGES.—The provisions of Articles 20 and 21 of Section III. of the Medical Code are applicable to, and should be carefully observed by, veterinary charges. 20. Medical officers upon arrival of stores may request a committee to inspect them, in order to ascertain if they are damaged or deficient in quantity. 21. A medical officer neglecting to avail himself of such a committee will be considered as having actually received the quantities supplied by the medical storekeeper, and be held responsible accordingly. As respects the particular instance now under reference, I beg to state that the principal medical storekeeper reports that "there can be no question as to payment either way, as the needles and syringes have been received in this department, and brought to account as repairable."

INDIA AS A FIELD OF ENTERPRISE FOR THE EDUCATED AND MIDDLE CLASSES.

A lecture on the above subject was delivered by Mr. I. T. Prichard on Thursday evening last, to the City of London College. The lecturer commenced by describing the circumstances under which the administration of India was carried on in the days of the old East India Company, to whose monopolising exclusive policy he attributed much of the ignorance about India, and prejudice against the country which now exists. He then proceeded to explain the advantages which the Civil Service offers, and the conditions under which appointments in that service are obtainable. He then described what is known in India as the Uncovenanted Service, and showed how large an opening there is for educated men in the various branches of Government employ, the railways, the educational department, &c. Passing on to the field of independent enterprise he enlarged upon the vast resources of India, and showed how in many ways, by the application of capital and industry, these resources may be made available. After giving a brief outline of the principal geographical features of the country illustrated by the map, and showing the lines of railway communication now open and in course of construction, he described the culture and manufacture of tea. Other vegetable products, such as coffee, indigo, rhea or china grass, and cinchona, were passed rapidly in review.

Lest the subject should appear to be represented to the audience too much in a couleur de rose, the lecturer proceeded to detail a few of the circumstances that in his opinion were calculated to counterbalance the advantages which India offers as a field for independent enterprise. Among the deterrent causes that keep Englishmen away from resorting to it, he believed that the principal one was the political disabilities under which Englishmen in India labour. Some amusement was caused by his elucidation of what he styled the minor evils of life, the worries and annoyances which were peculiar to every country in the world, and of which India, he was free to confess, was not without an ample share. Such inconvenient accompaniments of foreign life as snakes, mosquitoes, scorpions, and other vermin, were not to be altogether disregarded, although the lecturer said he thought they were hardly worthy of being taken seriously into account in considering whether a country was a favourable field for commercial speculation. He tried to make out the best for the climate, but it did not appear that he left a very favourable impression on the mind of the audience on that score. But in summing up the full value of the deterrent causes, in the shape of the minor worries of life, the lecturer remarked that there was one big worry which people in England suffered from, which far outweighed in importance all the mosquitoes and vermin of India, and which was much less prevalent in India than here, and that was "want of money." The lecturer was listened to with marked attention, and greeted at the conclusion with loud applause.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Friday, at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street; Colonel J. Holland, the chairman, presided.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that the half-year ending the 31st of December was generally the least productive half for profits, as three or four months of it was in the monsoon. If they had good roads to the railway the result would be different, as the goods traffic might be brought to the railway stations; but there were no good roads, and all beyond the railway, at either side of it, was a sea of mud. The last half-year was not peculiarly bad to their line. The Bombay and Baroda Railway receipts were £525 per mile in the past half-year, as compared with £566 in the corresponding half of 1869. The Madras had a receipt of £308 per mile, against £415 for the corresponding period. To show the peculiar falling off of the traffic he mentioned that in the year 1865, when only half the present mileage of the Great Indian Peninsula line was open—viz, 601 miles, the gross receipts for the half-year were £618,000, but in the half-year ending the 31st of December last, 1,196 miles being open for traffic, the receipts were £596,000, so that with double the mileage and a bad half-year the receipts were less than in 1865. He trusted there was a great future before them. The falling off in the value of cotton had materially affected their receipts, the price of cotton had fallen off 40 or 50 per cent., and the European war had a most depressing effect on the trade. The quantities of cotton sent to the line were enormous, and great quantities were stored at various stations, but until the price rose so as to pay for transport it would remain where it was at present. There was one great fault at Bombay, it took from three to five weeks to land goods from the shipping, while at Calcutta the whole business was done in three or five days; while the charge for dues at Bombay was double what it was at Calcutta. The locomotive charges consisted principally of fuel, wages, and materials for repairs of waggons and carriages. In each item there had been a substantial decrease. The coal was about half the whole charge, and he was happy to say that arrangements were being made for the supply of country coal. In the past half-year they had used some Nerbudda coal. They had 300 tons in December, 365 tons in January, and 873 tons in February. They were constructing a railway to the colliery, and they had decided on contracting for 2,000 tons of coal per month. The Chanda coal in the Nagpoor district was 75 feet deep, and not far from the railway the depth or thickness was 35 feet. It was rather better than the Nerbudda coal, and was one-third inferior to the English coal. The items of wages would not much decrease. The locomotive charges for repairs in the past half-year were £33,000, against £37,000, and the repairs of carriages were £39,000 against £41,000, which was very creditable to the locomotive and carriage superintendents, although there had been an increase in the extent of mileage. The expenditure for repairs would be much less if they had substantial sheds for machinery, and other facilities for repairs and renewals. They had been discussing that matter for 18 years with the Indian Government, and perhaps another 18 years would pass away before proper means would be adopted to supply what was so much required. Great loss was sustained for want of shed-room at various stations. The merchandise charges were £55,000, against £64,000 in the corresponding period; and, in regard to goods collected, £10,800 was charged, instead of £16,800 in the corresponding period. The maintenance of way was £101,905 in the past half-year, against £115,710 in the same half of 1869, being 17 per cent. against 21 per cent. There was no doubt that the receipts would again increase, and that there would be further reductions in expense, which would lead them to good dividends in the future. The income-tax was £13,779 at 3 per cent., but it would be reduced to 1 per cent. next year.

Mr. Nicol, a director, seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report.

Mr. Wilde said a coal line was being made from the colliery, the rails were laid on for a mile and a-half, and when the line was completed to the railway the supply of coal would rapidly increase. They would be able to supply 2,000 tons of coal per month when the new engines at the mine were at work.

The Chairman said they were fully aware of the advantage of having a supply of coal at a reduced rate, but he thought the benefit would not be quite so much as expected.

Mr. Wilde said they would have the Nerbudda coal always fresh from the pit, and that would compare with the English coal, which was sometimes a very long time out of the pit. He believed the difference of quality was not so much as had been estimated.

Resolutions were passed adopting the report and statement of accounts, and re-electing the retiring directors and auditor.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Parliamentary Committee on Indian Finance reassembled on Friday, the 19th inst. (Acton S. Ayrton, Esq., M.P., in the chair), when Mr. George Smith, of Serampore, journalist, was called and examined on the Abkari or excise regulations of Bengal. He had resided at Calcutta and Serampore for the last seventeen years, and had travelled much in the country. His inquiries had been directed to the opium monopoly especially, and he had visited Patna and Indore on that account, as he was desirous of ascertaining the reasons for the attacks made against the system of opium cultivation in Bengal in 1863-4. The investigations which, in the interests of the public, and as a journalist, he had made, resulted in his considering that the charges made by memorialists and the press against the Government for protecting a vicious and demoralising system of trade in opium and also in spirituous liquors, &c., were exaggerated; but nevertheless that there was sufficient amount of truth in the complaints to suggest to his mind the advisability of an entire reform of the Abkari laws, the abandonment of the opium monopoly and mode of taxation, and the imposition of excise duties similar to those of the Bombay customs; the new scale of customs dues for India to include all articles now coming under the Abkari laws, and others, which would have to be brought in. He gave lengthened evidence to prove the necessity for the changes he recommended, of which the following are the leading points.

With reference to opium, in lieu of the protective duties, the Government might resort to a land-tax, on acreage, district by district. By the alterations he proposed in the Abkari laws the people of India would be gainers morally, while the Government would ultimately become so financially. There was, therefore, political as well as financial reasons for abandoning the opium monopoly, and opening up the trade under equitable customs, or which should also be made applicable to the Sudder distillery system, and other modes of obtaining revenue in British India. The witness proceeded to give his experience of the practice with the Malwa opium trade, obtained while he was at Indore from 1864 to 1866. It resulted in his coming to the conclusion that it ought to be regulated by excise laws instead of being conserved as it stood under the treaty with Holkar, who claimed the Malwa estates.

The witness next gave evidence regarding the cultivation of Bengal opium and the revenue derived therefrom. If the monopoly were abolished, under improved Abkari regulations, the present extensive smuggling of the drug could be checked and the consequent costly preventive police reduced. When the Government was manufacturer and owner, and worked the trade by means of middlemen and agents under a most defective supervision, great fraud was constantly going on in the dealings with the opium, but if the trade was open, the mere self-interest of the licensed traders would lead to the prevention of such frauds.

Mr. Smith was next examined on the Abkari system of Bengal as dealing with the production of spirits and drugs. The principal objections to the system in vogue were these: the facilities for obtaining the coarse spirituous liquors had been the cause of excessive consumption, and the demoralising and physically degrading effects had so increased that the respectable native classes had organised temperance societies to operate against the evil. But the imposition of heavier licensing duties would be the most practical way of checking the continuance of the evil. Another evil connected with the trade was that there was collusion between the European and native collectors to effect the concealment of frauds on the revenue. Reverting to the morale of the question, the witness said that Sir Arthur Phayre had described the desolation created in Arracan by the introduction, amongst a people unacquainted with intoxicating drinks, of spirits and opium.

On Tuesday, the 23rd inst., the committee reassembled, and Mr. Solomon Cooper was examined on the home growth of opium in China. He had travelled much in China, one of his objects being to ascertain which were the provinces selected for the production of the native opium. He had found that the principal places of cultivation were in Tzetchuen and Yunan. The quality of native opium raised over all the estates was very weak and inferior to the foreign product. To the Chinese (who only smoked and did not eat opium) the native-grown drug is at present too weak to satisfy confirmed smokers, and a very large quantity had to be used to make up for the deficiency in strength as compared with Indian and Turkish opiums. The witness described the demoralising influences of the foreign drug on all the poorer population of China—all alike, men, women, and children smoked the opium. Amongst the agricultural class and the boatmen along the coast, the use was excessive without its interfering with their labour. The native product of opium he found was extending largely in Eastern China, and in defiance of Imperial prohibitory edicts. It would undoubtedly come into competition with the Indian trade as the Chinese improved their cultivation. At the commencement the Chinese cultivators only grew as much opium as they themselves consumed, and had not cultivated to any appreciable extent for the purposes of general trading. But this latter would follow. Still the raising of the indigenous opium was proceeding in all directions.

The prohibitory edicts alike against home and foreign opium were always evaded, and possibly the Imperial Government were passive in the matter. They appeared to "wink" at the disregard of edicts. The witness stated that having finished his travels in Eastern and Western China, he arrived at Shanghai, and thence proceeded to Calcutta (1868), where he was examined by a commission sitting on the Bengal opium monopoly, and he informed the commission that the result of his personal experience was that the native product of opium would interfere with the Indian trade, but that it might be some few years, say seven years, before the competition would become appreciable. His mode of meeting the difficulty would be to reduce the price of the opium in the Chinese market.

Sir Bartle Frere, late Governor of Bombay, was next called and examined on the Customs' regulations of that Presidency. He reviewed the history of the Customs previous to 1846, and from that date to 1857. In effect, there had been since the Mutiny many remissions of Customs revenue. Some duties had been reduced from twenty to seven and a-half per cent., others from ten to five per cent., and a large number of dutiable articles had been set free to commerce. In 1860 the Customs revenue was under two and three-quarter millions, and notwithstanding that only one-half or one-third of the old rate of duties was now taken, the revenue had more than recovered itself. India was now taking annually more than twenty millions sterling worth of English fabrics, cotton, silk, and woollen, and sending annually to England and the colonies some eight millions sterling worth of opium.

Sir Bartle showed that the Bombay Customs were framed on a more equitable principle than the Bengal. The duties levied were almost as low as was consistent with just claims to revenue. Indian liberal financiers proposed to abolish export duties all over India, and even to interfere with the land revenue, but this was an idea for millennium times. Compensation could be effected by increasing the duties on imported articles. Witness considered the salt tax as justifiable as it was a beneficial tax; it was readily conceded by the people of India, because its incidence fell so lightly on all as hardly to occasion public complaint. European fabrics for clothing might bear an additional duty without interfering with the wants of India in that respect. His "millennium" idea for India, however, was to sweep away all import duties as well as export duties. His opinion regarding the opium-trade was that duties ought to be imposed on opium accordingly as the increasing or decreasing trade could afford.

Sir Rutherford Alcock, British Minister to China, was next called and examined on the subject of the native growth of opium in China. At the request of the British Government he had instituted a thorough inquiry into the alleged native production, and into the State encouragement or otherwise of the growth. In February, 1869, he had addressed a despatch to Lord Stanley on the subject. The contents of this despatch confirmed the statements made of the cultivation proceeding rather extensively in Tzetchuen and Yunan, and of its extending all over China. The effect on commerce was expected to act injuriously on the interests of the China merchants, but at the present, at any rate, it had not interfered with the market in Indian opium. In discussing the whole subject of opium cultivation and trade with Chinese officials, he found that he could not trust their diplomacy, and must therefore wait the course of events showing whether the Imperial Government was really inimical now to the admission of the Indian opium through our hands, or inimical or not to the native production. The Chinese politicals preferred turning the discussion at the interviews he had had with them to any other question rather than the one immediately brought before them ; they would speak of nothing else but the missionary question, with which they considered all other political topics were connected. He had been informed officially that the authorities at Tzetchuen had memorialised the Government at Peking to compel the native cultivators of opium in that State to take out licences. Sir Rutherford concluded his evidence with the statement that his interviews and correspondence with several high provincial officials led him to believe that Prince Kung, without openly declaring his policy, meant the stamping out of the Indian opium from China and the native-grown drug also. Witness had proceeded to Calcutta to deliver his views and testimony on the whole question to the Governor-General in Council.

The Committee then adjourned for a fortnight.

Miscellaneous.

Straits Settlements.—(Downing-street, May 25).—The Queen has been pleased to appoint John James Greenshields, Esq., to be a member of the Legislative Council of the Straits Settlements.

Eastern Bengal Railway.—The report of the Eastern Bengal Railway Company, as presented on the 26th inst., states that the net profits of the half-year amounted to £59,621, being equal to 6 per cent. per annum, on £1,987,390. This result, it is added, is encouraging for the future operations of the undertaking with the aid of the extension line, but before surplus profits can be declared the net earnings must exceed the guaranteed interest on the whole capital expended.

Great Southern of India Railway.—The report of the Great Southern of India Railway Company, to be submitted on the 30th inst., states the net revenue for the year ending December at £28,315, showing an increase of £2,671 compared with 1869. During 1870 29 ships, conveying 28,071 tons of permanent way and other materials, were despatched from England, but it is feared that one of these vessels, the Salamanca, has foundered, as no intelligence has been received of her arrival at Negapatam, although she sailed from London nearly seven months ago.

The Nerbudda Coal and Iron Company.—The report of the Nerbudda Coal and Iron Company (Limited) states that great progress has been made in developing the colliery, and that the coal supplied to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company has given great satisfaction. A favourable report has also been received from the East Indian Railway Company on 100 tons supplied at their request, the coal being stated to be "quite suitable for locomotive purposes." It is proposed, with the sanction of the Secretary of State for India, to avoid the production of iron, as the directors are convinced that such operations cannot be carried on in India on a large scale at a profit.

Comfort for Soldiers.—The men of the Army Service Corps who are employed daily in the Woolwich Arsenal have had served out to them white canvas cap-covers, as a protection from the heat of the sun. Soldiers are generally provided with suitable head-gear in India and other hot climates, and a similar precaution against sunstroke has been often advocated for the troops at home during the hot summer months ; but this is the first time the suggestion has been acted upon. The whole uniform of the Army Service Corps is designed for comfort and convenience, the tunic being replaced by a loose serge frock, and the men who are employed at heavy manual labour being furnished with strong fustian trousers.

Indian Successes at Cambridge University and at Athletic Sports.—Mr. H. R. Philipps, an established clerk in the Public Works Department at the India Office, has gained the Porson prize at Cambridge University for Latin and Greek composition. At the Civil Service Athletic Sports, at the Lillie-bridge Grounds, West Brompton, on Saturday, the 13th May, the India Office, as usual, gained prizes.—Mr. W. Lindsay (an old Marlburian) winning the 120 yards hurdle race, when giving his opponents a start of six yards, whilst Mr. G. R. Johnston, late of King's College School, won the 300 yards handicap. We must not omit to mention that the high jump fell to Mr. A. Christie (Indian Civil Service), who cleared 5 ft. 4 in.

The Epsom Derby.—The result of the Derby was telegraphed to India from the Postal Telegraph Department, via Falmouth, at 3.43 P.M., and the intelligence reached Bombay at 3.54 P.M.

Madras Irrigation and Canal Company.—The report of the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company states that, according to a report from the chief engineer, the cost of completing the works will fall within the July statement. This assurance is the more satisfactory because, as stated at the last general meeting, a portion of the loan from Government of £600,000 has been expended in investigating and planning the sections of the Toombuddra project, not included in the supplementary contract and in the construction of additional bridges for the public convenience not represented in the sanctioned plans. The directors, looking to the great advantages that would accrue to the completed section of the company's project were the remaining portions carried on (the whole forming one scheme of works not capable of being separated except at a loss to each section), have solicited from the Secretary of State for India an extension of the present guarantee sufficient to cover the total amount of capital required.

Army Medical Service.—The annual dinner of the officers of the Medical Service of the Army, Navy, and Indian Army took place on Friday, at Willis's Rooms, the Director-General of the Navy in the chair. Sixty officers attended, amongst whom were : Sir Galbraith Logan, K.C.B., Director-General of the Army Medical Department ; Sir Ranald Martin, Sir David Deas, K.C.B., R.N., the President of the College of Physicians ; Dr. Burrows, the President of the Royal College of Surgeons ; Sir Wm. Fergusson, Inspector General Longmore, C.B., Surgeon Manley, V.C., Royal Artillery ; Dr. Slogget, R.N., Dr. Kidd, Staff Surgeon ; Dr. Pearce, R.N., Dr. Beatson, Dr. A. Clarke, Royal Artillery ; Dr. Legirtwood, Staff Surgeon ; Dr. De Chaumont, Staff Surgeon ; Dr. O'Flaherty, C.B., Dr. Murray, Bengal Army, Dr. Hume, C.B., Inspector-General ; Dr. Hannan, Royal Artillery ; Dr. Dominichetti, Staff Surgeon ; Dr. Swettenham, Staff Surgeon, &c.

Our Relations with Persia.—Our contemporary, the Times of India, distresses himself much for fear we should be commencing a meddle-and-muddle policy, in endeavouring to keep matters quiet between Persia and Afghanistan on the North-west, and Persia and Khelat on the west frontier of our Indian Empire. It may be too much to expect that our contemporary should be familiar with the text of treaties ; but we venture to suggest his reading the sixth article of the Treaty of Paris of 1857, from which he will see that, as far as regards the Perso-Afghan boundary, our "friendly offices" are bespoken in case of dispute, and that we engage to use our influence to prevent hostilities between the rival Powers. So far as regards the disputes between Persia and our feudatory the Khan of Khelat, a Bombay journalist might be supposed to be acquainted with the Treaty concluded by Sir Bartle Frere and the late General J. Jacob, in 1854, with the Khan of Khelat, by which that chief undertakes not to enter into any negotiations with Persia or any other Power, except through our Government. Does the Times of India wish us to ignore these State documents? And do they not justify our friendly mediation ?—Broad Arrow.

The Old Bank of Bombay.—We are able, on the authority of a letter from Mr. J. D. Nicol, M.P., to contradict the report circulated by a Bombay contemporary as to that gentleman's intention to move for a Select Committee this session on the Old Bank of Bombay's affairs. In denying the truth of any such report, Mr. Nicol still avows his readiness to "give any support in his power to any influential member taking up the question of the Bank in the House of Commons." For the encouragement, however, of those concerned, we are glad to say that the English committee of shareholders have lately added to the number Mr. J. Bruce Norton, late Advocate-General of Madras, and that they have been anxiously debating the question of an appeal to Parliament this session. After having taken due counsel with several influential friends and members of Parliament, it has been decided to move for the second portion of the report sent in by Sir C. Jackson's commission, the production of which document the committee have reason to believe will greatly assist them in bringing their labours to a prosperous issue. Meanwhile they are engaged in pressing the claims of the shareholders on the notice of friends earnest in their cause, and they have asked us to invite any Indian shareholders who may wish to offer suggestions or obtain information to address the Committee of English Shareholders at 55, Parliament-street, without loss of time.—Home News.

The Albert Life Assurance Company.—A meeting of policyholders in the Albert Life Assurance Company was held last Wednesday at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, for the purpose of considering the scheme for the reconstruction of the company, which had been prepared by Mr. Charles E. Lewis, solicitor, preparatory to its being laid before the arbitrator at the arbitration meeting to be held on Friday next, to consider all the schemes for reconstruction that may then be submitted. The attendance was limited ; Mr. Lewis occupied the chair. The scheme laid before the meeting was generally approved, and a resolution to that effect was carried.—The new Act to settle the affairs of this company by arbitration was issued on Saturday. There are thirty sections, and a list of twenty different companies with which the Albert was connected. Lord Cairns, the arbitrator, has extensive general and special power to arrange or reconstruct the Albert. All suits are abated, and all decisions of his Lordship to be final, and awards made by him to have the authority of an Act of Parliament. The expenses of the arbitration, as also of the Act, are to be paid as may be directed, and his Lordship is to have not less than £2,000 for his personal remuneration. In the event of Lord Cairns not being able to act, the Lord Chancellor is to appoint an arbitrator—a judge of the Superior Courts or member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society was held last Monday night, under the presidency of Sir Bartle Frere, who read a letter which he had received from Sir Roderick Murchison, expressing his deep regret at his inability to be present. Sir Roderick wrote :—"Those who have only seen me in my chair or in my carriage, into which I am carried, can have no idea of my thoroughly helpless bodily condition, though, thank God, my mind has been preserved intact. As, however, many persons have read in the newspapers long ago that I was rapidly recovering, I wish you to impress upon my associates the truth. Slowly, but very slowly indeed, I am recovering, and I live in the hope of being able during the next session to do my duty as a vice-president. I write these lines because I have received frequent letters from friends congratulating me erroneously on my recovery, and, if such an impression pervades the body of our society, my associates would, indeed, have due cause for surprise that I should not have made an effort to attend in person on this marked occasion." A valedictory address, in which Sir Roderick announced his retirement from the presidency of the society, was afterwards read by Mr. Markham. Sir Henry Rawlinson was declared duly elected President, and it was announced that the council had awarded the Founder's Medal to Sir Roderick Murchison, in recognition of the eminent services he had rendered to geography during his long connection with the society. The Patron's or Victoria Medal was presented to Dr. A. Keith Johnston. The annual dinner took place at Willis's Rooms in the evening.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, May 22.—ALLEGED CAPTURE OF HERAT.—In reply to Mr. EASTWICK, Lord ENFIELD said that no information had been received at the Foreign-office to the effect that Herat had been captured by Yakub Khan, and that no arrangements had been made between her Majesty's Government and that of Russia, in 1869, as to the extent of the dominions of Shir Ali Khan.

THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The consideration of clause 2 of the Army Bill was resumed in Committee. Sir G. JENKINSON moved as an amendment to insert in a schedule the cases in which exchanges should be allowed, all such exchanges being subject to the approval not only of the Commander-in-Chief, but of the Secretary of State for War. He proposed that the following cases should be specified in the schedule—namely, officers serving abroad who were invalided, or whose wives or children might be ill, or whose parents had died in England, or who had acquired property.—Mr. CARDWELL said that there was every disposition on the part of the Government to facilitate exchanges in such cases, but they could not depart from the principle of not legalising the payment of money by one officer to another as a consideration for the exchange.—In the course of the discussion the burden of complaint was the reticence of the Government as to the details of their reforms, and especially as to the ultimate cost of them.—Lord J. MANNERS could not help thinking that the explanations of the Secretary of State were singularly curt and unsatisfactory.—Mr. CARDWELL highly valued the virtue of courtesy, but there was courtesy to the House as well as to individuals, and he did not think that, after the decision that had already been given, and what had been said on both sides, he ought to be called upon to make long speeches upon the renewal of the question.—Mr. HARDY remarked that the repetition of inquiries was simply owing to the fact that the Secretary of State would not tell the Committee what it was that the country was about to purchase.—Mr. GILPIN, as an independent member, held that a very large expenditure was proposed for which no adequate reason had been shown. He had not therefore been able to vote with the Government ; but the effect of the factious opposition now offered must be to induce those who had not yet voted for the measure heartily to support it. He was for the abolition of purchase ; but he believed his constituents would have wished some better reasons to have been given why at this time, in this way, and at such cost, this change should be made.—On a division, the amendment was negatived by 211 to 168.—On the clause as a whole a new debate on the general merits of the purchase system was reopened by Lord GARLIES, who moved the rejection of the clause, though he confessed it was as a "forlorn hope."—Besides the Conservative members (including Mr. HENLEY) who opposed the measure, Mr. WHALLEY, on the Liberal side, offered to join in any effort, directly or indirectly, to frustrate the passage of the Bill.—Mr. SEELY, Jun., did not think it right that the nation should be called upon to pay so large a sum without some better guarantee that the money when spent would result in the changes which were promised. It was argued that no reforms could be effected until purchase was abolished ; but why not begin at once with the non-purchase corps? He appealed to the members beside him below the gangway who were so very much in favour of economy, to consider the expenditure which the country would have to bear under the scheme of the Government. They would require not only to increase the number but also the pay of officers. Within the last ten or twenty years all service requiring intelligence for its performance had very greatly risen in value, and if the services of the officers of the British army were fairly estimated, we should have to pay them double the amount which they now received. But what was the country to get for all this expenditure? That was really the question, and he suggested that the progress of the Bill should be delayed, and while the War Office was drawing up the new regulations the House might take up the Ballot Bill.—Mr. OTWAY, also a strong supporter of the abolition of purchase, maintained that it was impossible to do anything more prejudicial to the public service than to throw any impediment in the way of exchanges between officers of equal rank, and blamed the reticence of the Government in regard to the expense of the system of retirement. It was idle to suppose that some calculation of the cost had not been made, and it was scarcely fair to the House that such calculation had not been laid before it.—After a reply from Mr. CARDWELL the Committee divided, when Clause 2 was carried by 208 to 169, and the further progress of the Bill was adjourned until Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, May 25.—RELIGIOUS FEASTS IN INDIA.—In reply to Mr. HAVILAND-BURKE, Mr. G. DUFF said it was proposed by the Bombay Government to impose a tax upon all native feasts, religious or otherwise, but it was strongly opposed, and the Bill had been withdrawn.

SUPERCESSION OF COLONELS.—Sir R. KNIGHTLEY asked when the report of the Royal Commission on the supercession of colonels of the British Army would be laid on the table.—Mr. CARDWELL : The question is under the consideration of the India Office, and I stated formerly, in answer to the hon. member for Bewdley, that as soon as the course of the Government is decided upon the papers will be laid on the table. If, however, the hon. member likes to move for the report it can be laid separately.

ARMY REGULATION BILL.—An amendment on Clause 3 of the Army Bill was moved by Colonel ANSON, with the object of securing the immediate payment of regulation prices to all officers up to the rank of field officers.—Mr. CARDWELL opposed the proposal, on the ground that it was no part of the business of Parliament in abolishing purchase to make the position of existing officers more advantageous than it actually was at the present moment. The business of Parliament was to give complete indemnity—neither more nor less—to those affected by what it was now doing. If they were to give back to the purchase officer the money he spent in obtaining priority over the non-purchase officer, and also to maintain him in that priority, an injustice would be done both to the non-purchase officer and the taxpayer.—The amendment was rejected by 81 to 62. Sir G. JENKINSON moved the insertion in line 8, in which occur the words, "No officer can acquire any pecuniary interest in any commission," of the word "new" before commission.—Mr. CARDWELL objected to the amendment as unnecessary, and on a division it was negatived by 58 to 38.—Sir WILLIAM RUSSELL next moved a verbal amendment, the first of a series embodying a proposal that officers should be paid the regulation prices of their commissions in full satisfaction of all demands, provided they accepted it within six months of the passing of the Act ; and, further, that officers declining this option should retain a vested property in the sum they left in the hands of the Government, such sum to be paid over in the event of an officer's death to his representatives.—Mr. CARDWELL said this question had already been twice decided, and he had gone as far as he could in the way of concessions.—In the course of the discussion Sir F. GOLDSMID, Mr. RYLANDS, and Mr. MCLAREN protested against the recognition of over-regulation prices.—Mr. SALT also said the officers had had their inning, and the time had come for the taxpayers to have an inning. He doubted whether they were going to get value for their money.—On the other side of the House Lord ELCHO observed that if hitherto the subject had not been sufficiently understood, the dwindling majority of the Government showed that it was now being better understood day by day, at least in the House.—Sir G. JENKINSON pointed out that on the question of exchanges the Government majority was 43 ; on the abolition of purchase it was 39 ; and that night it was only 19.—Sir J. PAKINGTON urged the Government to avail themselves of the Whitsuntide vacation to reconsider the Bill. There were not twenty members in the House who really approved the measure. If the Government intended to persevere with it they should get some one on their own side of the House to support it.—Mr. GLADSTONE replied that the Government would certainly use all their influence with their friends to get them not to speak in favour of the Bill. Such speeches were a perfect godsend to hon. gentlemen opposite, who, though their command of words might be termed inexhaustible, yet, according to the law which governed all human affairs, did, after a certain time, begin to feel that they were near the end of their resources. A speech to be answered was a new starting-point, an access of life and vigous to orations like those made to-night. The Government could meet opposition of this kind only by patience, perseverance, persistence, and a resolute sacrifice of personal comfort. They were quite ready to spend and be spent as long as the majority thought fit to sustain its opinions.—In the end the amendment was rejected by 170 to 154 votes, the further decline in the Government majority to 16 being loudly cheered by the Opposition.—Mr. Gladstone then consented to report progress.

Notices of Motion.—Major Arbuthnot on the 21st June, to call attention to the state of the Royal Artillery force, and move that, in the opinion of the House, it is expedient to complete the inquiry once instituted into the same by means of a Royal Commission or some other court of inquiry, as her Majesty might please to appoint. —Nawab of Bengal.—Lord St. Lawrence gave notice that on June 27 he would draw the attention of the House to certain papers concerning the Nawab of Bengal, and move a resolution thereupon.

THE LATE MRS. MANNING.—India has lost a sincere friend and admirer in Mrs. Manning, the author of that able and well-known work—"Ancient and Mediæval India." She died on the 1st of April, after only a few days' illness, in the 78th year of her age. She was one of the originators of the "Indian Association" recently established in London for the moral and social advancement of our country. Her last act will be ever remembered with melancholy interest by the Hindu community, and especially by those who are interested in Native Female Education. A private letter dated London, 31st March, informs us that Mrs. Manning undertook to publish in England, at her own expense, in pamphlet form, Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen's recent lecture on "Native Female Improvement" at the Bengal Social Science Association, and distribute it among friends.—Indian Mirror.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

THE HISTORY

OF THE

BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

FROM THE

APPOINTMENT OF LORD HARDINGE

TO THE

POLITICAL EXTINCTION OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

BY

LIONEL JAMES TROTTER,

Late of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers.

The first volume of this History embraces the period from Lord Hardinge's appointment in 1844 to the retirement of the Marquis of Dalhousie in 1856.

The second volume commences with the arrival of Lord Canning in India in 1856, and closes with his lordship's death in 1862. This being the most eventful period in the annals of the East India Company, including the Mutiny, great pains have been taken in its narration.

"Captain Trotter has done good service in providing the public with a sequel to a standard work. . . . . And in every way his performance is worthy to take rank with that of his predecessor. . . . . The thoroughly satisfactory manner in which the task has been performed is greatly to the author's credit. . . . We take our leave of the work, congratulating its author upon having produced an addition to the 'History of India' at once permanent in purpose and popular in execution; acceptable in every way to the wants of the public, and especially adapted for the enlightenment of young members of the local service, to whom the modern annals of the country which they help to administer are of far more importance than the history of remote periods having little or no relation to the present day."—Standard.

"Both the plan and execution of the work are deserving of high praise. Full of interest and animation, and narrates with clearness and brevity all that took place during the period of which it treats. . . . The second volume of Mr. Trotter's history possesses the same merits by which the first was distinguished. It is written with great animation, and often with considerable graphic power. It tells its story with perspicuity and without needless or tiresome digressions. It avoids as far as possible that controversial vein into which Indian politicians and historians are alike prone to fall, and it is as impartial as any work is likely to be which deals with times so near our own. . . . . The narrative of the heart-rending events of the mutiny will of course have the greatest attraction for most readers, and it is in truth the best, as it is the principal part of the present volume. . . . . It appears to us that Mr. Trotter has been eminently successful in his treatment of a very exciting and interesting period of recent history."—London Review.

"The volume is full of interesting matter, comprising every event of importance during the exciting period of the rebellion, told in a concise, straightforward, and impartial manner, unincumbered by those copious extracts from documentary evidence which often serve no other purpose than increasing the bulk without adding to the usefulness of a work of this description."—Observer.

"Captain Trotter's reflections are few. . . . He has his own views, though he does not force them upon us in detail. . . . All this proves him to be far above the narrowness of the average Anglo-Indian. He speaks kindly of the natives too, and we do not remember a word as to our author's descriptive powers; they are such as his lighter writings would lead us to expect. . . . Whatever he has to tell Captain Trotter tells it in an animated and picturesque style. The night on the field at Ferozeshahur . . . is admirably painted; so is the grand success of Goojrat. The disarming of the veterans of the Khalsa . . . is a striking scene. Captain Trotter's book opens up many other interesting questions; it is full of notices of social changes; it points out also specially unfortunate way in which the annexation of Oudh was managed."—Fortnightly Review.

"Here we have before us the first volume of an eminently readable history. . . . The arrangement of the matter, the style, and, above all, the spirit which pervades his pages, are worthy of great commendation. Mr. Trotter is singularly free from the faults of a partisan writer. . . . The volume concludes with a masterly criticism on Lord Dalhousie's character and services."—Calcutta Englishman.

"We cannot say that he has dealt unjustly by Lord Canning's memory. . . . A well-considered volume, in which the heartiest acknowledgments are paid to Lord Canning for his temperate wisdom at a time when there was no man more abused than he. . . . He writes thoughtfully, yet with a soldier's sense of the stir of a brisk military narrative. His history of this great struggle is full and impartial. . . . We need not follow him through his vigorous rehearsal of the well-known incidents. It forms a very lucid history, the several parts being well planned and well grouped, and no important point being omitted or misrepresented."—Examiner.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Health and Vigour.—Setting aside external causes, which are sometimes unavoidable to the most regular livers, occasional disturbances of digestion will occur from error of diet, undue mastication, or over repletion, which may be corrected at once by these famous Pills, the alterative and tonic powers of which cannot be too highly extolled. A dose now and then will prove salutary to everyone, though a continued course must be taken by the confirmed invalid. It is wonderful how the appetite and digestion improve, how cheerfulness supplants dismal forebodings, in proportion as the Pills exert their wholesome influence over the animal economy. This purifying, regulating, and gently laxative medicine, both augments muscular strength and mental vigour.

MEMORANDUM.

In addition to the copies of this work prepared for the use of the Government, the Secretary of State for India in Council has authorised the publication of an edition for sale.

The work will contain about 450 Photographs on mounts, in eight volumes, super-royal 4to., and it will be issued at £2. 5s. per volume.

The First and Second Volumes are still on hand.

From the TIMES.

"We gather from the Preface that this work grew to its present handsome dimensions from a very modest commencement. It originated in the wish of Lord and Lady Canning to take home a private collection of photographs which might serve to recall the scenes and incidents of their Indian life, but as it advanced its importance began to be perceived, and Government, with a most judicious expenditure of public money, took it in hand. Very few of the photographs are unaccompanied by descriptions, often copious and graphic, of the subjects they illustrate, and the result is a singularly varied panorama of human life and character exhibited under almost every conceivable aspect. Although these four volumes deal with only a portion of the empire, there is scarcely a type of character, from the loftiest to the most debased, that is not to be found in them, and nowhere else, perhaps, in the world are peculiarities of character so strongly marked and sharply defined as in India. We might exhaust far more space than we can afford without giving the reader at all an adequate idea of the strange varieties of character to which these volumes introduce him."

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, May 13; Agra and Madras, May 11; Calcutta, May 10.

LORD MAYO reached Simlah on the afternoon of May 6. The meeting of the Legislative Council, as fixed for the forenoon of that day, had to be postponed, for want of members enough to make a quorum; but a meeting of the Executive Council was held instead, under the presidency of Lord Napier. The high officials were steadily gravitating towards the summer capital of India. Sir Richard and Lady Temple were expected there on the 7th, and Mr. Davies, the Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab, on the 10th. Owing to the non-assembly of the Viceroy's Council, the first appearance of Mr. F. Stephen's Bill for enabling the Governments of Bengal and the North-West Provinces to appoint sessions judges, was necessarily deferred till the following week.

To judge from what has lately transpired concerning the usual life of a convict in the Andaman Islands, the penal settlement there has for some time past been turned into a paradise of rum-drinking and unlimited idleness. It appears that the European and Eurasian convicts at any rate have been allowed to do pretty much as they pleased. They go freely into each other's rooms, wander where they like outside, take into their service the sepoys who are supposed to guard them, entertain their friends to dinner, and are free to draw for a whole gallon of rum at one time. Unluckily the dinners and the drinking sometimes lead to quarrels, which now and then end in bloodshedding or downright murder. All this came out at the Calcutta Criminal Sessions on May 6, when a Port Blair convict, James Devine, was convicted of murdering a comrade in a drunken quarrel; the sad but not unnatural close of an evening spent by Devine and his friends in getting through a gallon of rum. Devine becoming mad-drunk battered in the head of the man who had lain nearest him that night. He was found guilty, but recommended to mercy on the plea that "the crime would not in all probability have been committed, but for the disgraceful laxity of discipline and want of proper control over the convicts at Port Blair, as shown in the evidence." Whatever becomes of this particular ruffian, we may hope that General D. Stewart, the new Governor of the Andamans, will remove like temptations to like deeds of violence out of the convicts' way. Lord Napier, we are told, has long sighed for a little more discipline at Port Blair, and General Stewart, as being his own selection, may be trusted to carry out the desired reforms.

THE Bombay papers mention the death of Major A. C. Way, Acting Political Agent at Muscat. Major Way was an officer of the Bombay Staff Corps. His first commission dated from 1856; he was a captain of 1864 in the 28th N.I., and he gained his full majority in January, 1870, having taken local rank the year before in the Persian Gulf.

MAJOR-GENERAL GOLDSMID and the other members of the Commission, which has hitherto failed to settle the boundary questions between Persia and Afghanistan, are said to have returned to Kurrachee.

AFTER all the reassuring telegrams touching the continued safety of Herat and the defeat of Mohammed Yakoob Khan, we must now believe, until further tidings, in the fact of the taking of Herat. A Calcutta telegram of June 1 declares that the famous stronghold, which has been so often besieged by Afghan or Persian, fell on the 6th of May to the troops of Yakoob Khan, although but the day before all had been reported well. Its fall is ascribed to treachery, which is not improbable. Futteh Khan, the Governor, is said to have been slain and his son wounded. We are further assured that Feramorz Khan, the Ameer's general, was approaching cautiously with his army. To judge by the result, it seems a pity that tactics a little less Fabian were not pursued by the general in question. Knowing as he must have done the danger to which Herat was exposed, both from the troops without and from scarcity within its walls, he ought to have made all practicable haste to its relief. Perhaps he himself wished well to his master's son. It remains to see whether Yakoob Khan will succeed in retaining what, according to Mr. Vambery, he has won with the help of Persian influence or of a secret arrangement with Shahnawaz Khan. Possibly he means to use his conquest as a lever for driving a favourable bargain with his father, Shere Ali. We admit all that Professor Vambery urges in his letter to ourselves, touching the part once played by Yakoob in restoring his father's broken fortunes, and we are ready to allow that Shere Ali's prospects are not at this moment of the brightest. But in view of his former achievements, and of what he has lately done to cement his rule, it would be rash to begin croaking too loudly over his present reverses.

FROM the Indian papers we get some particulars of Yakoob Khan's progress about Herat. It appears that the young Sirdar defeated the Herat force which had come out to attack him at once in front and rear, and then marched on to Herat, which, with its Governor, he took at once. Such is the story told by the Kabul scribes, but how much of it is true we cannot tell, except that Herat must after all have been taken in the first week of May. We are also told that Yakoob Khan has written his father a respectful letter, hinting at his readiness to keep quiet if no attempt is made to drive him out of Herat.

HERAT has fallen, as it has fallen many times before; but we trust that none of our statesmen will take the tidings very much to heart. Herat was always a bone of contention between Persians and Afghans, and, as a question of historical fact, is more of a Persian than an Afghan city. It would even be better for English interests if Herat were efficiently garrisoned by Persian troops who could be trusted to hold it for the Shah against all comers. Be that as it may, the transfer of Herat from one Afghan governor to another need not disturb a healthy digestion for one moment. Russia will not thunder at the gates of India a whit the sooner for such an event. Still less can it justify the marvellous proposal made by a contemporary, that British troops should at once proceed to occupy Herat. It is difficult to treat such a proposal with a grave countenance when we consider that Herat is four hundred miles or so distant from the Punjab frontier, that any attempt to carry out such a movement would rouse all Afghanistan in arms against us and our ally at Kabul, and that nothing would be likelier than such an attempt to involve our Indian Empire in the direst disasters.

THE new Lieutenant-governor of Bengal has just fired off a very startling shell among the members of the Bengal Civil Service. He has given formal notice that no more furloughs on special leave can be granted until the number of officers already on leave has been reduced to the authorised limit of 20 per cent.—a limit which has of late been far exceeded. Nine of the absentees however are due in India by the end of October; but that is small comfort to those who had reckoned on escaping the next hot season in steamy Bengal.

THE Englishman still avows its belief in some dark design on the part of the India Office against the new Furlough Rules of the Covenanted Services. It virtually declares that a despatch was sent out to India by the second mail in March, proposing to allow civil servants only one year's furlough in every eight instead of every five years, without even the option of taking two years at once. It is also asserted that no second furlough would be granted on sick certificate until the eighth year after an officer's return from his former furlough. All we can say is that our contemporary has hit upon a portion of the truth, and no more. We believe that some sort of despatch on the subject in question has really been sent out; but, whatever its drift, no action will be taken upon it. It has, in fact, been already recalled, and the whole question is to remain in abeyance.

IT appears that Mr. E. B. Baker, V.C., Deputy Inspector General of Police, has been charged with the duty of raising the local police-force destined to guard the posts on the Eastern frontier of Bengal. The new levies will number a thousand men, chiefly Goorkhas. A good many have already been enlisted, and others will probably be taken from the local police and the frontier villages. Mr. Baker was to start for Sylhet early in May.

ACCORDING to Mr. Rivett-Carnac's last report on the cotton trade of the Berars and the Central Provinces, the whole of the cotton exported thence to Bombay this season up to the 10th April amounted to 102,415 full-pressed bales, 41,180 half-pressed bales, and 34,484 dokras, representing a total of about 155,089 bales, each weighing 3½ hundredweight, or half a Bombay kandy. The total for the same period of last year was 127,742 bales, or 27,347 fewer than this year. Most of the excess comes from the Berars, where the season was very favourable; the Central Provinces showing only a small increase on last season's yield. This is explained by the damage done to the crops in the Wurdah valley, by a diminished growth of the staple, and by the greater demand which the low price of the cotton encouraged among the local spinners. A good deal of home-spun cotton is consumed in the Central Provinces, and the returns for 1869-70 show that no less than 87,000 maunds —each of 82 lbs.—of cloth, made chiefly from the Wurdah valley cotton, was exported from those provinces. A few bales have also found their way to the Cawnpore mills. From the Nerbudda Valley not much cotton has yet been transferred to Bombay, although some new stations have been turned to account on the main line of the G. I. P. Railway. Some cotton has also been forwarded from Agra and other stations on the East Indian line to Bombay, but the returns of this branch of the trade are still to complete. From the Berars the cotton exported this season amounts in all to 131,510 bales, or an increase of 25,043 bales on the previous year.

THE little cotton lines of railway to Khangaum and Oomraotee have been doing satisfactory work. By the former line 51,941 bales have been carried besides other merchandise and some passengers, while the latter in the two months since it was opened has already carried 22,871 bales of cotton, besides a great deal of other merchandise. In fact 56 per cent. of the Berar cotton has passed over these small lines. The system of full-pressing cotton at the up-country markets still holds its own, in spite of the improved terms lately offered for the carriage of unpressed cotton. Of the crop already forwarded 72½ per cent. is full pressed and 25½ per cent. half-pressed, against only 2 per cent. of the unpressed article sent down in dokras. If only those stations which have full presses were reckoned, the proportion of full-pressed cotton would be "considerably larger." The exports by road over the Sawargaon Ghat and the Bhore and Thull Ghats have been very limited. Cotton keeps flowing into the markets in small quantities and will flow more freely as prices rise. Mr. R. Carnac anticipates for the whole season a total moderately reckoned at 230,000 bales. He is also sanguine of an early beginning to the branch line from Wurdah to Hinganghat. When this line shall have been extended to the coal-fields of Woon and Chanda, still more valuable results may be expected.

GREAT things are hoped for from the new seam of coal [illegible] at Wurrora, samples of which appear to be "at least 30 per cent. better and more valuable than the Ghugus sample." Too much stress indeed should not be placed in the results hitherto ascertained, because the coal may vary in quality in the same pit. But there is reason to hope that the new coal will be found superior to that of the Mayo Colliery which, at Rs. 25 a ton on the railway, is already doing about 74 per cent. of the work done by English coal. According to Mr. Bernard's estimate the Wurrora coal may be delivered at the railway at Rs. 17 to Rs. 19 a ton, so that if it should prove equal in working power to three-fourths of its quantity of English coal, it would be quite able to compete with the latter.

THE Select Committee on the Diplomatic and Consular Services have at last sent in their Report. With most of their recommendations this journal has no direct concern; but there is one passage on which, in the interests of India, we are bound to make some comment. Of late years the Persian Mission, which once entirely appertained to the Indian Government, has been managed directly by the English Foreign Office at the expense, in a great degree, of the Indian revenues. India has had the privilege of paying twelve thousand pounds a-year for duties discharged by agents of the English Government. The evidence taken by the Committee went to show the unfairness of such an arrangement, but gave no certain answer to the question whether England or India should take over the entire charge of the Persian Mission. It was argued, on the one hand, that the Foreign Office had the greater interest in looking after our relations with a Power which virtually obeyed orders from St. Petersburg; while Anglo-Indians, on the other hand, maintained the necessity of employing experienced Indian officers to represent the interests of our great Eastern Empire at the Court of its powerful neighbour the Shah. Now more than ever the balance of argument leans in our opinion to the latter side. It is high time, at any rate, that some definite and rational principle should be substituted for the curious anomalies that now exist. At present it appears that India pays the chief costs of a Mission maintained for the special advantage of the English Foreign Office, although the great bulk of the business done at Teheran would be conducted far more efficiently by officers of the Indian Government. Some such conviction seems to have forced itself on the minds of the Select Committee, for they "incline to the opinion that the Persian Mission should be placed under the authority of the Secretary of State for India." If however such a change should not be deemed best for the public interest, they advise that at any rate the choice of diplomatists for the Persian Mission should be confined as a rule to her Majesty's Indian Service, and that some part of the present charge of £12,000 a-year on the Indian revenues should be transferred to the Imperial Exchequer. Between these alternatives there would not be practically much to choose. In either case Indian experience would have its due weight in the management of our foreign policy on the side of Persia, while no future foreign minister would be likely to override the counsels of the Indian Government in a direction hurtful to Indian interests. At the same time, it is probable that the uses of a Persian Mission would be most steadily furthered if the entire control of it were vested in the India Office.

ON Tuesday last a number of gentlemen, including representatives of the India Office, went down to Messrs. Ransomes' Works at Ipswich, in order to witness the trial of two road traction-engines built on Mr. Thompson's patent for the Indian Government. The main feature of these engines is the fact of their wheels being covered with india-rubber tires four inches and a half thick, which take hold of the ground like an elephant's foot, and so carry the engines up and down the steepest gradients. By means of an outer chain of steel shoes, each three inches wide with an inch between every two, the wheels can pass easily over wet or stony ground. The larger of the two road-steamers is of 14-horse power, adapted for burning wood, and capable of drawing a large omnibus with a load of sixty-five passengers over the hilly road between Jhelum and Rawal Pindi. It is one of four ordered by the Indian Government for that purpose. The omnibus wheels are likewise bound with india-rubber tires. So smooth was the motion of the omnibus that a person inside it could write upon his knee as easily as if he were sitting in his own room. The pace also was very satisfactory. A smaller engine of 8-horse power went with marvellous ease over a field crossed by several large furrows, and right through a hollow twenty feet broad by forty feet long, with steep shelving sides all round. At any moment, at any part of its course, it could be stopped for any length of time without slipping backward or forward, and in the field it was "turned and guided as easily as a Bath chair."

WE have already acquainted our readers with the programme of the Association in Aid of Social Progress in India, as first started in Bristol and afterwards extended to London. It was the formation of a London branch to which the late Mrs. Manning had been devoting all her spare energies, when illness cut short her useful life. Her mantle however has fallen on worthy shoulders, and the London Branch already musters a goodly list of names. Ten shillings a-year, payable through Miss E. Manning or the Rev. T. Hunter, include all the privileges of membership; while for five shillings a-year the subscriber is entitled to attend the lectures, receive the Monthly Journal of the Society, and to share indeed every privilege except that of voting. The Chairman of the London Branch, Mr. I. T. ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, June 6, 1871.

"UNDER WHICH KING, BEZONIAN?"

WE had always thought that the new non-purchase regiments of the Line were to form an essential part of the army that obeys the orders of the English War Office. From one clause however of Mr. Cardwell's Army Regulation Bill it would seem as if such a notion were a grievous error. Clause IV. in Part I. of that Bill is described in the marginal heading as treating of "compensation to officers of certain Indian regiments." The clause itself provides that the claims of officers in the regiments aforesaid to the "saleable value" of their commissions on retirement shall be considered by the Commissioners, with due regard to "the instructions laid down by the Secretary of State for India in Council in relation to the repayment of contributions to the regimental bonus fund." In other words, these officers, who entered the new regiments under the impression that in so doing they ceased to belong to the Indian Army, are now bidden to look for no other compensation under the new Bill, than the mockery of compensation which Lord Cranborne's astute despatch offered to most of their comrades in the Indian Army. Mr. Cardwell proposes to compensate all officers holding saleable commissions in the full extra regulation value of their commissions, while the non-purchase officers of the Line, who also in a certain sense hold saleable commissions and are supposed to be under War Office rules, are to be put off with something very much less than the non-regulation prices they would else have received; and this on the plea of their still belonging to that Indian army from which they were severed ten years ago. It is very wrong of the officers concerned not to see the justice of this arrangement; but somehow they cannot be made to see it. So great indeed is their blindness that they have even persuaded their friends in Parliament to plead their cause against the generous author of the Army Bill. If any success should attend their efforts to get more than Mr. Cardwell is inclined to grant them, we may expect to see their ancient comrades of the Indian Army following the same unreasonable course. These latter will argue that if Queen's officers get back the full saleable value of their commissions, in spite of the extent to which that value was absolutely illegal, the old Company's officers have infinitely stronger claims to receive the full value of their commissions under the bonus system established with the formal sanction of the Court of Directors and the Board of Control. It is very sad that people should be so ungrateful for exceedingly small mercies; but in view of Mr. Cardwell's Bill and of the opinions expressed by the Governments of Madras and Bombay, with the tacit concurrence of Lord Napier, we greatly fear that the Indian officers will continue to agitate for something more than the Barmecide's feast so bountifully prepared for them by Lord Cranborne. Alas for the depravity of human nature, which refuses to be fed on air! For the sake however of peace and quietness, would it not be as well to offer a sop of some kind to these hungry stomachs? The Indian revenue could bear the burden of a few more thousands a year, and the India Office would recover its character for that munificence which its well-wishers have continually called in question.

THE EX-NAWAB OF TONK.

IT is certainly a sound general principle which impels the Home Government of India to uphold in public the public acts of the Indian Government in India. It is also a good thing that the work of governing India should be carried on for the most part in India rather than at home. But it is one thing to adopt a given rule for general purposes, and quite another thing to ignore the occasions when that rule evidently clashes with one of equal or higher obligations. There is always a point at which the maintenance of established authority itself demands a departure from the ordinary methods of maintaining it. If, for example, it could be shown that the Government of Lord Lawrence had acted wrongly in deposing the Nawab of Tonk for his alleged share in the murder of one of his nobles, the Home Government would surely be justified in reinstating the dethroned and disgraced prince. It would surely be better for the general interests of both countries that timely redress should be offered for a great wrong done in haste by an arbitrary process,—to assume for the moment that such wrong has been done,—than that a greater wrong to the community and to common justice should be engendered by an unwise persistence in a policy clearly too strait for the occasion.

Without a full knowledge of all the circumstances which led the late Viceroy in Council to depose the Nawab of Tonk and send him a State-Prisoner to Benares, we cannot of course express any decided opinion as to the Nawab's guilt. For all we know, the statements circulated by his numerous partisans may be as far from the truth as statements of that kind so often have been. In India especially the art of circumstantial fiction has been brought to such perfection, that you never can be quite certain which party to a civil suit, for instance, has the best claim to a verdict on the question of fact. The witnesses on both sides are apt to be so untrustworthy, that the attempt to get down to the real merits of the case often becomes more hopeless the further it proceeds. It is possible therefore that the story of what happened at Tonk on the evening of the 1st of August, 1867, as told by the Nawab's friends, may differ widely from that reported through Colonel Eden to the Indian Government. According to the former a wanton attack at nine o'clock in the evening, made by a body of armed men under the lead of the Lawa Thakoor's uncle, on the house of the Nawab's Minister, Sarwar Shah, ended in the death of their own leader and the loss of several lives on either side. Under orders from Colonel Eden, the Governor-General's Agent, an inquiry was conducted by his subordinate, Captain Bruce. Both the Nawab himself and his Wazeer Ahmed Hassan, who recounts his master's misfortunes in a readable little book of travels lately published in London,* declare that the inquiry was conducted in a way least likely to elicit the truth. "Many witnesses," says Ahmed Hassan," who could have thrown some light on the affair were not examined. I myself, who knew more about it probably than anyone, as I was on the spot immediately after it occurred, was not allowed the opportunity of making a deposition." Not a question was asked of the Nawab himself, nor was he ever confronted with any of his accusers. Nevertheless Captain Bruce in his report to Colonel Eden exonerated the Nawab of Tonk from all share in the alleged plot against the Thakoor of Lawa. Colonel Eden however, who had already prejudged the question by dismissing from his Court the Nawab's Agent, did not even wait, it is said, for the whole of Captain Bruce's report, before writing to the Indian Government to recommend the dethronement of the Nawab himself. Be that as it may, the Governor-General speedily informed the alleged culprit that he had been found guilty of plotting to "assassinate in cold blood a number of Chiefs and Rajpoots, who had been lured into the minister's house to their destruction." For this the unhappy prince, whose loyalty to ourselves and whose zeal for promoting the public weal of his little State had been more than once attested by English officers, was ordered forthwith to hand over the crown to his son, and retire in utter disgrace to Benares. Not till a year after the execution of this stern decree was he allowed to see any portion of the evidence on the strength of which he had been thus promptly and without a formal hearing condemned.

"Nothing was asked of me. I was not made acquainted with any evidence that went to prove my guilt, nor was I called upon to show my reasons against the evidence which held me guilty. In fact, all that was done was, that I was all on a sudden told of my being guilty." Such are the words in which the ex-Nawab himself describes the mode and issue of an inquiry into a matter touching the fair fame and worldly prospects of a prince who was also in effect a British subject. Whether he was guilty or not, he might well wonder at his exclusion from those rights of open inquiry and formal self-defence which, as he naturally argues, are not withheld from "a common Chowkidar" under British rule. And certainly the facts connected with the fatal affray at Tonk, so far as we know them, tend rather to implicate the Thakoor of Lawa than the prince in whose capital the Thakoor's uncle was slain. The Rajpoot Thakoor had for years been a refractory subject of his Mussulman master. There had been a standing feud between them. The Nawab had not long before sent troops against Lawa with the sanction of the British Agent, by whose influence the rebellious noble was induced to enter into certain engagements with his liege lord. These engagements he is accused of having broken in the most defiant manner. He had refused moreover to pay his share of the new taxation needed for the general improvement of the State. The Nawab had therefore summoned him to Tonk in order that he might "explain to him everything." Taken by itself, such a summons might look suspicious, but the Thakoor went with his armed retainers, and he at any rate was neither murdered nor entrapped into any trap. Had the Nawab been evilly disposed towards him, would he have spared the nephew and killed the uncle? As he himself puts it, "supposing that I wished to have him killed, what possible object could I have had in getting his men and his uncle killed? Had my aims been particularly directed towards his uncle, he might have been shot on the road somehow or other by a common sepoy." And why did the uncle go with his armed retainers to the house of the Nawab's Minister at the late hour of nine in the evening, uninvited and undesired?

It is possible, of course, that an Eastern potentate, seeking to rid himself of a troublesome foe, might have planned to gain his end by means of a seemingly accidental quarrel, and that the Lawa chief, suspecting mischief, may have allowed his uncle to go properly escorted to the place of meeting in his stead. In that case the visit must have been made by appointment—an unlikely thing at so late an hour. But whatever was the real state of affairs, however strongly the evidence taken may have borne against the Nawab, it was surely a grave default of justice to punish an offender of his rank without putting him fairly on his defence. If he be innocent, it is no light thing to have discrowned, degraded, and banished from his own country a prince who had theretofore borne a high repute as a ruler among the princes of Rajpootana, in pursuance of an inquiry carried out against all rules of ordinary British justice. Even Moolraj and the King of Delhi were tried in open court by judges fairly competent to decide the question of their guilt.

Mr. Fowler's motion for a Select Committee on the Nawab's case was withdrawn for the time being on account of Sir S.

* "Pilgrimage to the Caaba and Charing Cross." W. H. Allen and Co.

Northcote's absence from England. But the matter has not fallen to the ground, for Sir Charles Wingfield will move next week an address to the Crown, praying that the Nawab's case may be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. We hope that the Government will not resist the motion, unless it can point out some better way of re-opening the inquiry that closed so fatally for the Nawab. Best of all would it be if the Home Government of India would forestal Sir Charles by appointing a mixed commission of English and native officials of the highest rank to try the case at issue on the spot where the alleged crime took place.

AFFAIRS IN KABUL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Allow me to make a few remarks upon some points in the last edition of your valuable paper. You say that Russia appears to be resolved on punishing Khiva for its alleged support of the insurgent Tartars on the Steppes. I think Russia is doing something else than punishing, although she never failed to discover grave crimes in the countries her aggressive policy was directed at. It is not the place to discuss whether Khiva would be happier under Russian rule or not, but that the Uzbeks of that Khanat have in the last years studiously avoided all inimical contact with the white Czar you may be quite sure. Khiva was always the place where those Kazaks resorted who were unwilling to pay the Russian taxes, but in withdrawing from the so-called Russian territory they did not acknowledge the supremacy of the Khan of Khiva, and consequently the latter had nothing to do with them. Quite recently the Russian papers made a great fuss about a certain Sadik Khan, whom they style the Kirgiz rebel, and of whom it is said that he acts under the support of Khiva. As far as my information reaches, Sadik Khan is already three years ago roaming on the right bank of the Oxus, and the fact that the Russians plan only just now his punishment, is the best evidence of their having accomplished the preparations to invade Khiva and to subdue it. The next observation I take the liberty to make refers to that opinion of yours, expressed in reference to my last letter to the Times, that Shere Ali has weathered worse storms than this of Yakoob's raising. To be sure the successor of the Dost had to fight hard for his paternal bequest, but I beg to remind you that his chief support in these struggles was mostly his valiant son, who now stands against him, and from the time that Yakoob Khan left his cause there was no victory of note in the track of your ally's arms.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Pesth University, May 29. ARMINIUS VAMBERY.

A HINT TO THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Through the medium of your popular and widely-circulated columns I beg leave to direct the attention of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India, as well as that of the Committee on Indian Finance, now sitting for the purpose of considering the subject of Indian Finance, to an evil of no inconsiderable magnitude, both as regards the natives and the revenues of India.

Most of your readers will doubtless recollect the wholesale destruction effected a few years ago by the London police of all such unfortunate members of the canine species as were home- and owner-less, and whose corpses, consigned to the waters of the Thames, befouled and polluted them for many a day, to the no small indignation of that respectable river deity, as well as to the annoyance of the olfactory organs of such as inhabited its banks. This act of stern necessity proved, it must be confessed, a good hit, while, at the same time, a judicious improvement in the assessment and collection of the dog-tax formed no despicable addition to the public revenue.

Now, Sir, a similar evil has for many years afflicted India, but the modus medicandi adopted by the Local Government has been that of offering a reward of two annas (threepence, English) per head for every dog destroyed, so that, of course, the mehtars (sweepers), who are the vilest and most brutal of the canaille, destroy, without the least compunction or discrimination, many perfectly healthy and valuable dogs, which are often thus sacrificed, to the great regret, as well as pecuniary loss, of their owners, without the least benefit to the State. If the dog is highly esteemed, not to say beloved, throughout Europe for his fidelity and other valuable qualities, and whom Lord Byron eulogises as > "The first to welcome, foremost to defend,

> Whose honest heart is still his master's own,
> Who labours, fights, lives, breathes for him alone,"

how much more ought he to be appreciated in India, especially in the open and exposed villages and small towns, where, as a watch-dog, he not only defends his master's property from the midnight robber, but also protects, with undaunted courage, the infant in its cradle—nay, even sometimes the aged and bed-ridden from becoming the prey of the ferocious denizens of the jungle? For these reasons, Sir, it is hoped that the Local Government may be advised to discharge from its service that respectable fraternity known as the halál khores, and, by the imposition of a trifling tax upon dogs, increase, instead of diminish, as by the present system they now do, the revenue of the country.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

SYED ABDOOLLAH.

THE BONUS QUESTION.

The Times of India says, it is by no means too late to revert to the recent correspondence on the bonus question, in which were enunciated the opinions of Sir Seymour Fitzgerald and Sir Augustus Spencer, on the subject of the losses sustained by Indian military officers, through the great amalgamation muddle, elaborated by Sir Charles Wood. Though the letters under notice had regard chiefly to one pecuniary point in that transaction, the writers involuntarily suggest a review of the whole. Indian officers will most certainly be grateful for this generous advocacy of their rights; but the arguments adduced seem to lose sight of the real cause of special complaint,—which is not what a man paid to his seniors to obtain promotion, but what he, or rather his step was worth to his juniors, when he wished to retire. The bonus case, if placed in an extreme point of view, would be summed up as follows, viz., Ensign A entered the Indian army, and after a service of thirty years obtained his regimental majority. It had so happened that during his whole career he had not purchased a single step, there had been no opportunity to purchase out his seniors. But in course of time, his seniors had succumbed to the climate, or been killed in action. He had toiled up the slow ladder of promotion to the rank of field officer, waiting patiently, in the confident hope that when he might choose to retire he was sure to be able to retire on the value of his "step," which would probably be worth £3,000 or £4,000 to him or to his juniors who should subscribe for it. It is this vested right and expectation which amalgamation annihilated. Thus, in this way, it was that gentlemen who rested confidently on the reasonable hope of retiring from the service with a small sum, were, so far as that went, entirely beggared.

THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT VERSUS AMEER KHAN.

The Daily Examiner holds that the conduct of the Government with respect to the application in the matter of Ameer Khan, now before Mr. Justice Phear, is, to say the least, remarkable. On two separate occasions has the senior Government pleader, acting under the instructions of the Government, made most strange motions on the Appellate side of the High Court. As we showed last Friday, the first failed, but undismayed, and acting under the direct orders of the Government of Bengal, the senior Government pleader used the time allowed by Mr. Justice Phear to file affidvaits and to show cause against the rule served on Mr. O'Kinealy, in attempting to remove the case from his Lordship's jurisdiction. The application is unique in its nature, and it seems to us would never have been made if the Government were not an interested party, and deeply interested in its result. Not only was the object of the application strange; the manner in which it was made was still more so. On several occasions the judges had to ask what the Government pleader wanted. Mr. Justice Macpherson once stated that there was no use of coming to them with "wandering applications," and on one other occasion his Lordship remarked that the application was "substantially for an injunction to restrain Mr. Justice Phear," and that he possessed "no power to grant such an application." A Judge sitting in Westminster Hall would certainly stand aghast if he heard that an application had been made to his brother Judges to restrain him from proceeding with a case, and even the Court of Chancery when compelled to interfere to stop a case does not direct the Judge to proceed no further, but simply grants an injunction to the parties from proceeding in the suit. We cannot understand what the Government dread from Mr. Justice Phear's entertaining the application. Our barrister judges have in the olden days been the defenders of the liberties of the subject against the encroachments of the Government. Does the Government fear that the mantle of their predecessors has descended upon the present holders of office? We think that Mr. Justice Phear will fairly and honestly decide the cause, acting from neither fear nor favour to the Government or the prisoners. And we cannot help feeling that the persistent endeavours of the Government to wrest the case from his hands either casts a slur on the reputation of an able and honest judge or will give colour to the slanders of its detractors, who might say that Lord Mayo and his advisers fear lest the cause should be heard by an able judge, with an independent jury, with a learned bar as spectators, and a discerning public to judge of the result. For the sake of justice, for the honour of the British name, for the credit of our judicial administration, we regret that the proceedings on the appellate side of the High Court have been taken, and we do hope most earnestly and sincerely that the Government will grant the boon which the prisoners ask.

THE PERMANENT SETTLEMENT.

The Madras Athenæum is immensely delighted to find that the Duke of Argyll, always ready to spend money and increase his own patronage, has given his decided opinion that the rich men of Bengal are to bear a portion of the taxation which has hitherto fallen only on the poor. Our own Governor has, in his peculiarly philosophical way, described the peshcush as rent and not tax. We thus hope that if the zemindars cannot have their rents raised they will have to bear taxation. They will grumble, as the pets of people and nations always grumble, when they cease to be pets, but they can do nothing. They know, unless they believe in ghosts, which is probable, that if it were not for the strong arm of the British Government, the ryots would make a permanent settlement of a good number of them. We do not object to the theory that it is good to have rich men in a country, but we have a strong aversion to a continuance of the practice of robbing the poor and the country at large to fill the pockets of the hereditary and other tax-collectors. Riches thrust upon a man in carrying out what is to him an unintelligible principle are valued little. People do not value that which is cheap or that for which they have no hereditary respect. The earlier zemindars scarcely knew whence their riches came, and scarcely cared whither they went. Mr. Mangles states that the present generation pocket upwards of £6,000,000 of money belonging of right to the Government, and that the ryots are oppressed more than in any other part of India. Yet, if they are asked to pay anything towards making roads or supporting schools, they either stump or whine about "breach of faith!" They are so blindly ignorant that they expect every other province in India to be taxed for their benefit, while, if it had not been for the sacrifice of public rights to them, we could have constructed all the railways in India out of revenue, and should never have stood in need of an income-tax. In keeping faith with the zemindars another and far more important breach of faith may be committed. Government, when assuming the power it holds, pledges itself before the world to govern equitably, to lay on taxes equitably, to break down monopolies, and to abstain from raising up classes of privileged men. To keep faith with the zemindars of Bengal, strictly as they interpret the term, is to perpetrate a general robbery of the whole country, and to substitute a real and widespread grievance for one narrow and mainly imaginary.

COOLING RAILWAY CARRIAGES.

The Englishman asks whether, after the much talking and writing which we have heard and seen, it is not time now to do something? Or will Lord Mayo have to say at the end of the present hot season what he ironically said in the middle of last: "Nothing has, in fact, been done, but there seems a prospect of something being done some day." We trust not, but it looks very much as if this would be the case, and we confess our faith is weak. We have now fairly entered into the hot season, and we can only just say that we are not as far off a beginning as we were last year. This is faint praise, if indeed it be praise at all, when we remember what great things were to have been accomplished before this hot weather set in. What about General Beadle and his committee and his Rs. 5,000, whose proceedings have hitherto been shrouded in the mystery of absolute silence? Has not the public a right to ask what has been done with its money, and to expect an answer to the question? But, if the Government will not move in the matter—we must in justice exclude from the reproach implied by this "if," Lord Mayo, who has shown by his whole action and speech in the matter his anxiety on behalf of railway travellers—cannot the railway companies themselves move in the matter? Do they hesitate at the expense? Let them look this difficulty in the face, and it will vanish. The cost of fitting a railway carriage with Mr. Saunders's invention is Rs. 250; Mr. Lancaster's costs, he says, only Rs. 170; and Mr. Grant, without going into details, characterises his as "cheap." Why not charge passengers who travel in these cooled carriages a rupee extra for every fifty or hundred miles? or, if that is not sufficient to compensate the railway company for cost of taking in water, &c., and for damage for carriages (which would, we believe, be much less serious than some suppose), why not charge two, or even three rupees extra? Every one, we are sure, would thankfully pay for a cool carriage free, or almost free, from dust, and the Railway Companies would certainly not lose by the transaction. Let them make a commencement by trying the experiment with the first class carriages; and if they do not find that the number of first class passengers rapidly increases, we shall be much surprised. In the meantime, could they not adopt for all carriages some simple system of ventilation, which would cost next to nothing, and would afford some relief? Would it be too difficult to have something similar to a small windsail—not necessarily of canvas—to catch the current rushing past the carriage, with a fine wire gauze to keep out the dust, or a fan or a windmill above the carriage, which would be moved by the same current, and would force the air through a grating on the floor? Or the case might be reserved, and a fan below, attached to and revolved by the axle, might be made to assist in forcing the heated air through an aperture in the top of the carriage. These are crude detached ideas, but we would fain see something done, and we put them forward as being better than nothing. If even these trifling improvements cost too much, we are surely not unreasonable in asking that all carriages intended for carrying passengers in the evening may at least be kept out of the sun during the day, and that tickets may be collected at stations which are protected from the sun by some kind of covering. Until quite lately these ordinary and self-evident precautions were not always observed by the East India Railway Company, and the consequence was that daily travellers after the heat of the day found themselves shut up in the evening in moving ovens, and exposed in the morning to the full glare and heat of the sun while their tickets were being collected.

MYSORE APPOINTMENTS.

The Madras Athenæum observes that the province of Mysore from its vicinity to Madras and the similarity of the habits and customs of its people as well as the salubriousness of its climate has ever been, and is likely to be, until at least it is handed over to Madras, a bone of contention between Madrassees and Bengalees. The coveted appointments of this delightful territory are always eagerly sought for, and the Bengal services are, under present circumstances, necessarily resorted to, as a rule, for incumbents to fill the same. This is right enough under the existing state of things, and follows as a matter of course from Mysore being, not in the Madras, but in the Bengal Presidency. But what is not right, and what Madrassees grumble at, is that Bengal, in the exercise of its patronage, serves inferior men for the sake of sending them to Mysore to the detriment and injury of the Officers of the Commission generally. For example, the four principal appointments in the Mysore Province are held by four gentlemen who have no particular claims to them on any grounds—that of merit or otherwise. But it is perfectly well known that the Bengalees, as a rule, do not care about the minor appointments in Mysore; they look for the principal places only, leaving the subordinate appointments for those who choose to accept them. But as Madras is, however, sometimes resorted to for officers to fill a certain number of the subordinate posts of the Commission, it is but fair to expect that, in the course of time, one or more of these subordinates would find himself gazetted for one of the higher appointments. This is not, however, nor, under existing arrangements, is it likely to be, the case, and hence a not unnatural growl in consequence every now and then is indulged in by the members of the Madras services.

RECORDS OF THE MUTINY.—The new series of "Selections from Records of the Punjab Government and of its Dependencies" has now reached the seventh volume. This volume, though rather old in date, contains matter of engrossing interest, for instance, "the trial of Mahommed Bahadur Shah, titular King of Delhi, and of Moghul Beg and of Hajee, all of Delhi, for rebellion against the British Government and murder of Europeans during 1857." We believe that the trial of the wretched ex-king has not before been published separately. This volume, therefore, besides furnishing a chronicle of one of the saddest tragedies of history, affords an excellent basis for appreciating the underlying causes of the mutiny, and of the tremendous excitement with which the native mind seethed during those sad days. The spectacle and contrast it gives us of native rule succeeding British is most instructive and consolatory: indeed the childish orders and ludicrous decrees of that ephemeral court at Delhi would excite our laughter except for the painful surroundings. The ex-king was tried on the 27th January, 1858, and following days, before a special military commission appointed for the purpose by Sir John Lawrence; and Moghul Beg, by one of those strange coincidences so frequent in history, was tried exactly four years afterwards, on the 27th January, 1862, for the murder of Mr. Fraser, Captain Douglas, and others; and Hajee on the 10th December, 1868. The contents of this volume awaken a painful interest, but the fascination of the recorded incidents triumphs over the feeling of pain. The records of the Punjab relating to the period of the mutiny if ungarbled should furnish us with many volumes little inferior in interest to the one before us.—Pioneer.

STATION TALK.

LUCKNOW, April 30.—A great impetus seems to have been suddenly given to the grain traffic. The Moonshee who does the statistical business on the part of Government reported yesterday that 125 hackery-loads, aggregating 7,500 maunds, had arrived from Seetapore and Nawabgunge, and had passed through Ameenabad en route to the E.I.R. Station, Cawnpore, for despatch up country. The road for the last three days has been crowded with carts, all moving in the same direction. This is the produce of the dry season crop, and is nothing unusual, but it is sufficient to make the E.I. Railway run an extra goods train; the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway might have had the whole of this traffic had they hurried on the extension work; they might have three months of it yet were they to open at once. But there is no known reason why merchants should prefer to send their goods by country carts from Lucknow to Cawnpore when the rail is open to them. The merchants themselves say that they would be perfectly willing to send their consignments by rail, but are prevented from doing so by goods-shed extortion. The despatching business has no trustworthy supervision, being left entirely to Bengali Baboos. Under such arrangements it would be hardly possible for any railway to pay. This may be true or not, but the fact stares us in the face that all the ordinary grain traffic and most of the timber, oil, goor, cotton, &c., go from Lucknow to Cawnpore by the common road when there is a railway open, which according to the tariff carries at a lower rate and in two hours instead of three days. When Mr. Wilson was agent and chief engineer the state of things was very different; it would be advisable to send for him again. The general dullness of the station was somewhat relieved yesterday by an evening entertainment given to the élite by Baboo Duckinarunjun Mookerjee, late Secretary to the Oudh British Indian Association. The dinner was recherché, the wines were excellent, the band of the 62nd Regiment (European) was in attendance and played some excellent selections; on the whole the guests were all well pleased. This liberal-hearted native gentleman distinguished himself by the activity he displayed in the service of Government during the mutiny at Burdwan, in consideration of which he was rewarded with a jagheer valued at Rs. 12,000 per annum, besides which he has much private property in addition, and is about the most popular Talookdar in Oudh. Mirza Abbas Beg, a superannuated Extra Assistant under Act XXV. of 1862, is now Secretary to the Oudh B. I. Association; he is also manager of the Lucknow Times press, and was a particular friend of Captain Remmington, who, according to the Lucknow correspondent of the Mofussilite, is about to be sent to a lunatic asylum for throwing stones at the windows of the magistrate's court at Roy Bareilly, because he had been stopped from lecturing to natives on the peculiar tenets of his own faith. He was on the point of making a convert of Mirza Abbas Beg, when Dr. Cannon, the civil surgeon, ordered the police to take him to the lunatic asylum, but as the unfortunate got wind of the order, he made a clean bolt of it, and has only just turned up. On the 28th current Major General Brooke Taylor left this station to assume command of the Sirhind Division; his departure was announced by a salute of eleven guns from the Armstrong Battery at Mohamed Bagh.

HILLS NORTH OF DEYRAH, May 2.—As promised, I write a line to keep you informed of the Viceregal party's movements in these, or rather in the Deyrah Dhoon diggings. Lady Mayo and Captain Gregory arrived there on Wednesday evening; Friday and Saturday were spent in beating every likely jungle for holding tigers. Her Ladyship must have undergone great fatigue in so perseveringly searching as she did, and deserved to be rewarded, but not a tiger was seen, ungallant brutes! The camp was pitched at Khansarao. Tiger-shooting in the Dhoon under most favourable circumstances is attended with uncertainty. Lord Mayo and the Hon. Major Bourke reached Deyrah on Sunday evening. During his shooting excursion his Lordship has bagged nineteen tigers, so he may well be proud of his bag. Lady Mayo started for Chukrata on Sunday evening, and Lord Mayo and suite left yesterday (Monday) for Chukrata. So after all the party did not visit Mussoorie, being anxious to reach their destination at Simla. The weather up here even now is warm; high winds prevail, with heaps of dust, making outdoor visiting in the day anything but pleasant. Distant thunder is heard almost daily; heavy banks of clouds overtop the far distant snowy range, but the rain keeps off.

MHOW, April 28.—There has been so little doing in the station that I have not had any matter of interest to send you, and now it is to report the death of an officer who, during the few months he has been here, has made himself much respected. Last evening Captain George Baillie, Executive Engineer, was buried with military honours, the whole of the officers of the station attending. He died on the night of the 27th inst., after twenty-four hours illness. The deceased belonged to the Invalid Battalion, but was formerly in the Bengal Artillery, and was for many years at Roorkee in the D. P. W. When Messrs. Norris and Weller took the contract at Jubbulpore on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, Captain Baillie was appointed to act as Superintendent of Works, and did so until the failure of the contractors, when he rejoined the D. P. W., and had only joined his present appointment some six months. The weather here is very warm, thermometer at 6 A.M. 80 degrees, and at 12 A.M. 110 degrees; however, the nights keep pretty cool, and there is scarcely any sickness among the troops. Our new Cantonment Magistrate is Captain Mayne, of the 1st Regiment Central India Horse, who acted in the same appointment at Gwalior, when Colonel Wright was in England. The work is so heavy that but few officers would accept the appointment. The Railway Engineers have made their surveys, and are now waiting for final orders to commence work, which will begin at the Khundwah end of the line. The survey is to be made as far as Oojein, which is placed under Mr. Campbell; from Oojein to Neemuch is under Mr. Miller. Colonel FitzWygram, of the 15th Hussars, has gone on leave to Simla, and Colonel Thompson, 1st Assistant Agent at Indore, is about to leave for England.

BAREILLY, April 29.—The Viceroy came in on the 26th inst. at about 9 P.M., stopped at the Commissioner's for the night, and left next morning. The Nawab of Rampore has been very liberal on the occasion. I hear the Viceroy was entertained from the 20th to the 27th of April at the expense of the Nawab, who also laid all daks for the party throughout his Lordship's journey within the bounds of this division. On the 27th Mr. Hearne, the police inspector, was tried before Mr. Moens, but as he was bewildered and could utter nothing in his defence the trial has been postponed. Mr. Warwick, the Kotwal, is transferred to Agra, but he intends resigning his appointment. Two or three days ago another victim of the Moburrum came here from Pillibheet. The man, a Mussulman, was wounded by a bullet-shot. The police reported "the cause of death to be cough, though he had a slight gun-shot wound." The post-mortem examination of the body has, I believe, cleared the point. In all up to this time the number of men killed both here and at Pillibheet is nine, six being Hindoos and three Mussulmans. The Mussulmen are ordered to take out their tazzeas to Karbulla as quietly as possible on Monday the 1st proximo. A company of the 25th K. O. B., two of Native Infantry, and two of Cavalry, will be present in the city to preserve order. The Magisterial and Police officers of rank are to keep posts in different parts of the city. The Hindoos, I understand, will not be allowed to leave their houses on that day for a few hours in the morning. I hope much of the ill-feeling between the two races will wear out by this step. A telegram from home informed the Hon. Mr. R. Drummond at Budaon—to which place he accompanied Lord Mayo—of the death of Mrs. Drummond. I hear he has applied for three months' leave. The temperature is mild and weather agreeable. Bazaar rates are very cheap.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MR. R. DAVIES.—The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab reached Simla on the 10th May, and is for the present the guest of the Hon. Mr. Ellis at Barnes Court. His Honour has, however, engaged "Aberfoyle" for the season.

RETRENCHMENTS.—Among the other minor retrenchments of the Government of India the forage allowance hitherto granted to surgeons of brigades of field artillery has been disallowed, the order to refund being made retrospective to the 1st of January!

EDUCATIONAL.—The Indian Mirror is extremely sorry to record the death of Mr. J. Sanders, senior Professor of Literature in the Presidency College, Calcutta. He was one of the most painstaking and conscientous men in the education department. The melancholy event occurred in England, and has been telegraphed to the friends of the deceased in Calcutta.

PRESENT TO PRINCESS LOUISE.—Among the numerous marriage presents received by Princess Louise was a cushion made by a native lady in Calcutta. It has called forth a special and courteous letter of acknowledgment from Col. Ponsonby, the Queen's Private Secretary, who writes to say that Her Royal Highness has been extremely pleased with it, and offers her best thanks to the donor for her kindness in thinking of her and sending the present.

NATIVES REWARDED.—The Governor General in Council has conferred the titles of "Raja Bahadoor," "Rai Bahadoor," and "Bahadoor," respectively, upon Moony Pal, zemindar of Pallehra; Pergunnait Jug Deo Sing, of Petoria; and Tekait Dyanidhi Deo, of Bonai, in the tributary mehals of Cuttack and Chota Nagpore, as a personal distinction, in recognition of their distinguished services during the operations for the suppression of the rebellion against the Raja of Keonjhur in 1867-68.

A SILLY MAGISTRATE.—The Magistrate of Balasore turned iconoclast, a Bengal contemporary tells us, proposed lately that the Legislature should interfere to prevent the exposure of obscene idols in the heathen temples of Orissa. The late Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, "not liking to deal with such a delicate subject," referred the question to the British Indian Association and the British Indian Association, of course, at once protested against any action whatever in that direction. The Queen's proclamation of strict religious neutrality would be violated.

JUDICIAL.—The doubts as to the jurisdiction of Sessions Judges in the N. W. Provinces are to be set at rest by a short Act prepared by Mr. Stephen. The Act will give retrospective validity to the proceedings of the Courts of Sessions, as well as provide distinctly for the future.

THE LUSHAI RAIDS.—The Englishman hears that Mr. Simpson, the Commissioner of Dacca, and Mr. Edgar have both been summoned down to Calcutta to give the Lieutenant-Governor the benefit of their advice and experience on the best method of dealing with the Lushais next cold season.

DEATH OF AN INDIAN PIONEER.—On the 23rd April, died in Assam, at the age of 78, Charles Alexander Bruce, the discoverer of the tea plant in Assam. In 1839 he was presented with the thanks of Government, and in 1841 the Society of Arts conferred on him a gold medal "for discovering the indigenous tea tracts and for cultivating and preparing tea in Assam." This is, the Pioneer believes, all the reward he got for making a trade which was last year valued at Rs. 1,02,96,362.

CENSUS IN CALCUTTA.—The census of "British-born residents of Calcutta," which was to have been taken on the 15th May, has, we learn from the Englishman, been postponed for a month, and will, under present arrangements, be taken on the 15th June. Our contemporary expresses a hope that full instructions will be issued in good time, and that the Commissioner of Police will explain distinctly what is meant by the somewhat ambiguous title of "British-born persons residing in Calcutta," to whom his notice is addressed.

FINANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.—The Budget of the North-West Provinces shows, we see, a surplus of £17,468. One advantage, at least, the Local Government derive from the decentralisation scheme. Should there be an actual surplus at the end of the year, it will remain at their credit, instead of going to swell the cash balance of the Imperial Government. Such surpluses, says the Lieutenant-Governor, in urging upon his subordinates the necessity of economy, "will form a fund which can be re-allotted in the ensuing year to meet the more pressing demands for improvement and increased efficiency."

NEW PORTRAITS AT LAHORE.—The portraits of Sir H. Edwardes and Mr. Roberts have arrived safe in Lahore. They are at present in the Lawrence Hall, but are not yet hung. They have been executed with great care, and are beautifully framed. It is, however, difficult to judge of their effect until they are placed in the position they are to occupy. Sir H. Edwardes is taken in a frock coat. It is thought by some that of the two Mr. Roberts' is the best likeness; but of that we must leave the Punjabees, who knew them both so well, to judge for themselves when the pictures are fairly hung and set in their proper light.—Indian Public Opinion, May 5.

SIMLAH NEWS.—Rumour says that Simlah will this year be honoured by their Highnesses the Maharajahs of Jeypore, Puttiala, and Vizianagram, each of whom, it is further said, "contemplates giving a grand ball to the station."—On Wednesday, the 24th May, being the anniversary of her Majesty's birthday, H.E. was to hold a levee at Peterhoff, Simlah.—It appears to be now arranged that Col. Barrow, the Chief Commissioner in Oudh, should take leave to England.—It is said that Col. Ramsay, C.B., the Commissioner of Kumaon, has been granted a five years' extension of tenure of his present appointment. The salary of the office is, at the same time, to be increased by Rs. 500 per mensem.

BITTEN BY A SHARK.—A native, while bathing in the river at Fort Point yesterday morning, was severely bitten in the leg by a shark, and a large piece of his flesh was carried away; the man endeavoured to extricate himself with his right hand, and had all his fingers bitten off; a large portion of flesh from off his thigh was also carried away. So severe were the injuries he received that he was obliged to be promptly removed to the hospital, but very little hopes of his recovery are entertained. The fishermen about the place succeeded in capturing the shark, as also another who had evidently been in waiting to lend a helping hand. The fishermen were rewarded by the Commissioner with Rs. 5.—Daily Examiner, May 2.

MAJOR-GENERAL DONALD STEWART.—Major-General Donald Martin Stewart, C.B., has been appointed to the charge of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. This officer was in command of the Bengal brigade in the Abyssinian Expedition. He served against the Hill Tribes on the Peshawur frontier in 1854-55, and distinguished himself in the Mutiny by volunteering to carry despatches from the Government of the North-West Provinces to the officer commanding at Delhi, after all communication with the Upper Provinces had been cut off. He served throughout the siege of Delhi, and at the siege and capture of Lucknow as assistant adjutant-general of the army. General Stewart is at present at home on two years' leave, which will expire in July, so that he will probably join his new appointment direct from England.

CAPTAIN HUTTON.—We are sorry to learn of the possibility of the services of another man capable of advancing the interests of India being of necessity transferred to other regions. On dit that Captain Hutton, of Mussoorie, is meditating a permanent move to Australia. Hope deferred has made the gallant gentleman's heart sick, we fancy, and seeing no prospect of the Government of India employing him suitably in this country, he will quit it in disgust, as many have done before him, to give another all the advantage of that ripe experience which study, reflection and years have enabled him to accumulate, and which he knows so well how to bring to practical use. Sheep-farming in Australia is not unsuited to a naturalist; and if the fussy but impractical Government of India does not care about sericulture, the Australian colonists evidently do, for, if we are correctly informed, some of them have expressed a strong desire to have Captain Hutton among them.—Delhi Gazette.

NEW ROAD TO PARASNATH.—The Government are surveying a road from Giridhi Railway Station near the Chord Line to Madhuban at the foot of Parasnath; the Jains will pay the cost of construction to Government, who will carry out the work. Immense numbers of Jain pilgrims visit Parasnath every year, and this road will prove of great service to them. The country it goes through is very picturesque and undulating, and will very likely be a favourite route for visitors to Parasnath; but the road leading from Madhuban to Parasnath is in parts very steep, and a good one with easy gradients might be laid out along the valley at an expense of only five or six thousand rupees. The existing road, traversed by forty or fifty thousand pilgrims in the cold weather, is in parts steep; it was constructed ages ago, when the principle of road-making was the shortest line from one place to another. The Jains in Western India have been noted for their liberality, and since the Bombay route has been open, they are coming in increasing numbers to visit Parasnath in the cold season.

MILITARY.—It is stated that instructions have been sent to the Supreme Government to send H.M.'s 20th Hussars to England at the end of this year. Consequent on the impending relief of Cavalry corps, the following moves are said to be likely:—4th Hussars, from Meerut to Umballa. 11th Hussars, from Muttra to Lucknow. 15th Hussars, from Mhow to Muttra. 21st Hussars, from Lucknow to Mhow. 10th Hussars, to Meerut.—The Englishman says that in consequence of Major General Brooke Taylor only availing himself of privilege leave, the appointment of Colonel Bright, C.B., 1-19th Regiment, to a brigade, is postponed. The senior officer on the spot will act temporarily during General Taylor's absence.—The Pioneer understands that should Allahabad be retained as the head-quarters of a brigade of artillery after the 25th is broken up, the head quarters of the 16th brigade may go there in its place. Otherwise, the 16th will relieve the 8th brigade at Lucknow, the 8th going to Barrackpore.

THE WAHABEE CASE.—On the 22nd of April, and again on the 29th, a motion was made by the senior Government pleader of the High Court, Calcutta, on behalf of the Bengal Government, before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Loch, calling on those judges to declare that Mr. Justice Phear had no power to make an order for the transfer of the "Wahabee" case from the Patna Sessions Court to the High Court. Mr. Justice Phear, it appears, had in reality not passed any such order, although on the 20th Mr. Ingram, the counsel for the prisoners, had applied for it. The Indian Daily News considers the senior Government pleader to have been guilty of "a grave contempt of Court" in his application. Mr. T. H. Cowie, the late Advocate General of Bengal, is still in Calcutta, and it is said that he, instead of Serjeant Ballantine, has been engaged for the defence of Ameer Khan. We understand that the High Court of Calcutta have declined to remove the trial of the Wahabees from Patna, where it will take place in about a fortnight.—Bombay Gazette, May 13.

THE CALCUTTA MUSEUM.—At a recent meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Colonel Strachey made a communication to the effect that the Government of India have lately resolved to place four lacs of rupees in deposit, which sum should be available for completing the new Museum building at Calcutta. He regretted the delay which has been caused in the construction of the building, and stated that it was greatly due to the financial difficulty in which the Government of India found themselves a short time ago. Colonel Strachey mentioned that the original approximate estimate amounted to about three and a-half lacs of rupees. This sum had been sanctioned by Government, and the work for the new building was commenced. Subsequently the regular estimate came up, and it amounted to about seven lacs. After about four lacs had already been spent, a revised estimate was called for, and this rose to about ten lacs. It was, therefore, not surprising that the Government stepped in and inquired into the whole matter carefully, and this caused such a delay that it became impossible to complete the Museum within the appointed time, 23rd March, 1871. However, Colonel Strachey hoped that the present action taken by Government in the matter would bring the building to its desired completion at as early a date as possible.

AGRARIAN OUTRAGE IN OUDH.—Agrarian outrage has already commenced in Oudh; and the first outbreak is reported from the precise spot which any officer conversant with the intestine politics of the province would have pitched upon, namely, the Amethee estate. Originally a small taluqah belonging to a man of extremely low Thakoor caste, it was enormously enlarged under the present holder, whose relatives, independent proprietors like himself, had been induced to club together and allow him to act as the common representative of the brotherhood in protecting them from Nawabee exaction and oppression. This lasted five years, or since Oudh was annexed. When the regular settlement came on, these men came forward and got decrees which protected not indeed their rights, because they were placed in perpetual subordination as tributaries to their elder brother, but at any rate something which contented them, well knowing how the Wingfield regime favoured the Oudh nobles. To their dismay, however, their Rajah appealed, the appeal was accepted, and the Privy Council finally held that under an artful clause which had been slipped into Act XXXI. of 1866, the talookdars must be put in possession of their estates. So the first tableau of injustice and confiscation closes. The second is still more shameful to British administration. The taluqdar expressed a wish that the Court of Wards would take charge of his estate. We read his wish to be that although the Courts had thrown down his brethren under his feet, yet he would prefer if they would likewise trample them into the dust for him; in plain English, he was either ashamed or afraid to rackrent and eject them himself; he wanted an English officer to beat them down flat and smooth. We need not say that his request was complied with amid the muttered execrations of every officer in Oudh who knew the circumstances. One assistant settlement officer who had passed the equitable decrees afterwards reversed, resigned his appointment from disgust. Scene the second closes with a British Government servant managing the estate, diving, coercing, attacking, ejecting, auctioning for the Oudh noble. Scene the third was reported in our issue of the 26th, the said officer lying riddled with balls in a faqueer's hut. Again, as often before, we warn the Oudh Government that its feeble and foolish policy is concentrating upon the British name the double hatred which attaches to a harsh landlord and to an alien rule. We have an Irish nobleman at the helm of the State. We beg and pray of him to call for a report on the history and management of the Amethee estate the largest but two in Oudh. One simple question should be put,—How many notices of ejectment have been issued by the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpore as manager of the Court of Wards (viz., as plantiff, to be tried by himself afterwards as judge) having for their effect the expulsion of occupants from their ancestral property, and all to please the taluqdar whom Lord Clyde threatened to hang?—Pioneer, May 11.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 10.—No change of importance has taken place in this market since last mail, and the transactions of the week are again on a very limited scale. GREY SHIRTINGS: 39-inch goods have changed hands to a moderate extent at about last mail's rates. For the wide widths there have been no sales reported. GREY JACCONETS continue moveable in fair quantities, without change in value. MADAPOLLAMS and T-CLOTHS continue very quiet, prices for the former being lower. BLEACHED GOODS generally are fairly saleable at, in some instances, firmer rates. The TWIST market has been closed since last mail, on account of native holidays.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 10.—SALTPETRE: The demand has been steady during the week both for England and America, but there has been no change in prices, refined 5 per cent. refraction being from Rs. 6-14 to 7. RICE: The market for all descriptions has hardened generally throughout the week, and a rise has taken place, which has prevented many transactions. Fine Table has been dealt in at Rs. 3-6, and middling rules from Rs. 2-9 to 2-13. LINSEED: The demand for Europe has continued steady, and, as the stocks are not large, prices have an upward tendency, especially for small grain. RAPESEED: Notwithstanding that supplies have been coming in freely from Eastern Bengal, the demand for shipment to England has been sufficiently extensive to maintain prices at fully last week's rates, and in some instances a rise in prices can be quoted. POPPYSEED: The only business reported has been in forward contracts for the new crop at Rs. 4-2 to 4-3 for delivery in one or two months. The stock of old is almost exhausted. RAW SILK: The unfavourable news from France of the continuance of civil war has still a depressing influence on this market, combined with the uncertainty as to the outturn of the China and Japan crops. Prices, therefore, are likely to decline, especially as the March hund is coming freely into the market. About 125 bales have changed hands during the week, the filatures especially commanding good prices as compared with native growths. CORAHS: There have been more transactions this week. There have also been further shipments on owners' account, which have reduced the stocks for the present.

Madras.

RANGOON AND LORD MAYO.—It is understood in Rangoon that his Excellency the Viceroy will visit Burmah in December next, in company with Lady Mayo and a large suite.

JUDICIAL.—Mr. Justice Collett, of the Madras High Court, will not return to India on the expiry of his leave. His intention is to retire from the service.

HEAVY FLOOD.—There was a flood in the Krishna on the night of the 6th May (says the Madras Athenæum), which washed away the temporary road laid across the bed of the river, and which will necessitate, we understand, special provision being made for the transport of passengers and mails between the Chicksagoor and Krishna stations on the G. I. P. Railway.

THE GODAVERY.—"The Godavery is an expensive river. A sum of nine and a-half lakhs has already," says the Pioneer, "been sanctioned for the improvement and irrigation of the eastern section of the delta of the Godavery, and now the Government of India has been requested to sanction an estimate of thirteen lakhs for the improvement and irrigation of the western section. Why, it would not cost much more than thirty lakhs to make a better river!"

PONDICHERRY.—From Pondicherry we learn that the election of a Deputy to represent French India in the National Assembly at Paris is carried on with much spirit. Every now and then a fresh candidate steps into the field and presses his claims on the attention of the electors. The election will not be over until the end of the month, until which time our lively neighbours will be all effervescence and excitement.

THE COAL QUESTION IN GODAVERY.—An attempt has been made by Mr. Oldham, of the Geological Survey, to pooh pooh Dr. Hunter and Lieut.-Colonel Applegath in their searches after coal in the Godavery district. Both the latter gentlemen, however, stick to their belief in the existence of the mineral in this Presidency, and do not slacken their exertions one whit to find the hidden treasure. We hope they may be successful, and thus prove the science and deductions of Mr. Oldham to be at fault.—Athenæum.

MILITARY.—We (Athenæum) are informed that Major-General Shubrick intends proceeding to England on furlough as soon as he is relieved of the command of the Madras army by the newly appointed Commander-in-Chief, Major General Haines. Brigadier General Shakespear is spoken of as likely to act for General Shubrick in the divisional command of the Hyderabad subsidiary force during General Shubrick's absence. Major-General Haines is expected to arrive in Madras the latter end of the month, accompanied by Lieutenant-Colonel Gough, of the 12th Lancers, whom the General has appointed as his Military Secretary. Captain Carr, of the M.S.C., we understand, will be appointed A.D.C. to his Excellency. A depot for army telegraphy is about to be opened in Bangalore for the instruction of officers and soldiers in the system at present in vogue of army telegraphy and signalling by lights. The proposal, which was made by this Government some time ago, has just been sanctioned by the Government of India. The appointment also of a qualified officer as instructor has likewise been sanctioned.

MR. DALYELL ON LAND SETTLEMENT.—Mr. Dalyell, of the Madras Civil Service, has been under examination before the Parliamentary Commission on Indian Finance. From the position this gentleman has so long held as Sub-Secretary and Secretary of the Board of Revenue, he should have had it in his power to give valuable evidence as to the real bearing of the Settlement now in progress in this presidency, but we observe with surprise that what he has said is calculated to mislead rather than enlighten the home public. He is reported to have "expressed his belief that at the end of thirty years there will be an increase of the revenue if the Settlement was revised with reference to prices;" and to have said that "the Government Settlement proceeded on a basis of one third of the gross profit." He added, "prices have risen, but wages have not risen in the same ratio; agricultural labour is generally paid in grain in Madras. These grain wages have not risen much of late years; but wages paid in coin have increased considerably. The expenditure on public works has been a means of raising the monetary rates of wages." Also, "Government ought to reap some benefit from this rise in values, but it could not interfere with the Settlement now in existence."—Madras Mail.

RANGOON NEWS.—From Rangoon we learn that Mr. Eden, the newly-appointed Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, is about to make a tour of inspection, first visiting Akyab, where he will remain a short time. On his return he will visit Moulmein. After these places have been visited it is the Chief Commissioner's intention, it is said, to proceed up the valley of the Irrawaddy as far as the frontier town of Thayetmyo, inspecting the civil stations on the banks of the great river of Burmah. "Mr. Eden," says the Rangoon Times, "will accomplish more than his predecessor did, who seldom left Rangoon, but the present Chief will see everything with his own eyes. The first Chief Commissioner, Sir Arthur P. Phayre, travelled in every part of the province, and saw everything with his own eyes. General Fytche went nowhere, except once to the capital, for which he received C.S.I. through the kindness of Lord Lawrence." General Norman, C.B., returned to Rangoon on the 28th ult., after having been on a tour of inspection up country at the frontier; he was accompanied by the Chief Engineer, Colonel Fraser, C.B., who will shortly leave for Allahabad, much to the regret of the Rangoonites, who would fain see him remain to complete his own work, the Prome and Rangoon Railway. It is proposed to give Colonel Fraser a farewell dinner previous to his departure to join his new appointment. A commencement has been made with the new wharf. It is to be five hundred feet wide, and large enough to allow two steamers to go alongside at the same time. News has arrived in Rangoon of a large fire that broke out in Mandalay on the 8th ult., and which consumed about five hundred houses.—Bombay Gazette, May 13.

THE MADRAS ARMY.—We understand that orders have been issued by the Madras Government to arm eight regiments of native infantry in the Madras Presidency with Enfield rifles. The Adjutant-General having reported that the present stock of Enfields would admit of eight corps being supplied with them, the Government authorised their issue to the following corps:—The 1st, 3rd, 6th, 10th, 17th, 27th, 29th, and 39th Regiments of native infantry. The 1st N.I. is at Kamptee, having arrived there from Hoosungabad in February, 1867; the 3rd P.L.I. lately proceeded to Secunderabad from Madras; the 6th proceeded to Nagode, in the Bengal Presidency, from Vellore, in the latter part of 1868; and the 10th is at Dorundah, also a military station of Bengal. The 17th is in Madras, having arrived from Kurrachee about two years ago. The 27th is now in Bangalore, the 29th in Secunderabad, and the 39th also in Bangalore. It seems to be the intention of the Government to supply the native army with Enfields as supplies arrive from England. In connection with the armament of the regiments of native infantry, the military member of the Governor-General's Council stated as follows in his last Budget statement:—The Government of India in June, 1869, asked for 64,000 Martini-Henry rifles to be sent out as soon as possible, as it was understood that this would be the weapon finally adopted. That demand was not complied with, and Sniders have only slowly come out, much more slowly than we have desired; but they are now issued to thirty regiments out of fifty, and we have received intimation of a sufficiency being under despatch to complete the regiments still armed with muzzle-loaders. I may remark that we have a sufficiency of Snider ammunition in this country, while our own breech-loading cartridge factory is approaching completion. Thirty-one regiments of native infantry have received Enfield rifles, or have rifles under despatch to them.—Madras Standard.

THE HARBOUR ENGINEER.—Mr. G. Robertson, the Harbour Engineer, has completed his inspection of Mangalore, Cannanore, Calicut, Beypore, Narakal, Cochin, Alleppey, Quilon, Tuticorin, Paumben Passage, Negapatam, Porto-Novo, and Coconada. He has also minutely inspected the system of backwater communication from near Beypore to Trivandrum. The preparation of his reports on these places will now occupy some time, but he promises that they shall be as concise as possible. Lieutenant-colonel Farewell, Acting Superintending Engineer of the 7th Division, met him at Beypore and accompanied him throughout the inspection. Mr. Robertson cannot sufficiently thank the Madras Government for sending this officer with him, for his excellent arrangements, and his knowledge of the languages, and methods of travel, enabled Mr. Robertson to do a great deal in a short time. Mr. Robertson has to thank him for much personal kindness, which made the inspection almost a pleasure tour instead of what it would otherwise have been to one unaccustomed to Indian travel and tropical exposure. His Excellency the Governor in Council notices with pleasure the assistance which Mr. Robertson acknowledges to have received from Lieutenant-colonel Farewell. Mr. Robertson will return to Europe by the steamer due here from Calcutta on Saturday, and will resume his duties in Leith Harbour until the autumn, when he will come back to India to prosecute his inquiries into the capabilities of the Hooghly, Bombay Harbour, &c. No advantage would be gained, he thinks, by his remaining in India, to compile his report on the ports he has already visited, and he would naturally prefer to perform that portion of his duty at home, where, if need be, he will be within easy reach of professional counsel. As the Government have no funds available for the carrying out of any improvements that he may recommend, the submission of the report may not, in Mr. Robertson's opinion, seem very urgent. But what is to be done at all should, we think, be done quickly, especially with regard to the harbours of Cocanada, Cochin, and Mangalore. Mr. Robertson's engagement is for two years on £2,000 a-year, and as he will spend less than a half of each year in India, he is very well remunerated. We wish some philanthropic creature would offer us £4,000 as a gratuity for making two inexpensive pleasure trips during the cold months in India, and for offering advice which will, in all probability, be "ordered to be recorded." But journalistic, unlike engineering virtue, is not thus rewarded in this land.—Madras Mail.

STATION TALK.

KURRACHEE, May 7.—The Assistant Commissionership in Sind was lately offered to Mr. Mulock, C.S., the Assistant Collector and Magistrate of Tanna, but for some unexplained reason that officer declined to accept it. Mr. Wyllie, who has held the berth since Mr. Moor's departure to England, on furlough, left for Bombay by the last mail, having, as stated in a previous letter, obtained six months' leave to go home for the purpose of recruiting his health; and until Government can get somebody to succeed him, Sir William Merewether has conferred the office upon his second assistant, Mr. Rozare. This gentleman is fully equal to the requirements of the position, and the Kurrachee journals are at one with the voice of the local public in commending Sir William for having thus recognised the merits of one who has for years past maintained a high character for the able and efficient manner in which he has conducted the important and, oft-times, laborious duties of his post. This is the first instance in this Province in which a member of the uncovenanted grade has been selected to fill, though temporarily, an office which has invariably been occupied by a covenanted Civil Servant. In consequence of Mr. Rozare's elevation to the higher appointment, Mr. Gardiner, the superintendent of the Government Press, has been nominated Second Assistant. The duties of Educational Inspector, which Mr. Wyllie discharged in addition to those of Assistant Commissioner, have been entrusted to Rao Sahib Narrayen Juggernath, and those of Branch Registrar-General to Mr. Ashby Ingle, of the Currency Department. The Military Pay-office of the Sind District has at last fallen under the scythe of retrenchment. A telegram has been received from the military accountant, at Bombay, intimating that the department will be abolished next month, when the whole of its records are to be packed up and forwarded to Poona. The chief accountant and two assistants will be provided for elsewhere, and the rest will be discharged with gratuities, or pensioned according to the period they have been in the service. As for Captain Bourdillon, he will revert to his substantive appointment of Pension Paymaster at Poona. It is reported that an officer will shortly be sent by Government to take charge of the office of Assistant Quartermaster General at Kurrachee. Major Davis, of the 2nd Beloochees, has been conducting the duties since Colonel Edwardes' transfer to the Poona division of the army. The steamfer Penang arrived from Gwadur last Monday, with the following gentlemen on board:—Major General Goldsmid, who has been specially deputed by Government to settle the "boundary rights" between the Persians and the Khelat State, and the personal Assistants, Captains Smith and Lovett; Captain C. H. Harrison, Political Agent at Khelat, and Assistant Surgeon Bowman. These officers are, at present, residing at Government House. Suddenly, and without any note of warning, the works in connection with the Napier Barracks have been suspended in accordance with the orders received from Government. The contractors, Messrs. Mackenzie and Cosser, have sent in, through the usual channel, a claim for compensation, which they have set down at a reasonable sum, and not, as has been asserted by some people, at nearly three lacs and thirty thousand rupees! The low state of the national coffers is alleged to be the cause of the stoppage of the whole of the public works in Kurrachee.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

ADDRESS TO THE POPE.—The Catholics of Bombay and Poona have adopted an address to the Pope on the occasion of the approaching anniversary of his pontificate.

BARODA.—The Ranee at Baroda took up her abode at the Residency on May 5, where she will remain under the immediate charge of Major and Mrs. Coles, acting under the orders of the Resident, who has moved into another house in the cantonment.

WIDOW MARRIED.—There has been another case of widow marriage in Bombay, in the Bania caste. The friends and relatives of the bridegroom are among the most influential men of the Bania community.

FAMINE IN PERSIA.—Famine rages in Persia. Thousands are said to lie by the wayside unburied; cases are known of parents eating their own children, and of Mahomedans killing and devouring Parsees. European residents in the famine-stricken districts, dreading the sights that abound, keep within their own houses.

MEMENTOES OF PRINCE ALFRED'S VISIT.—A sum of Rs. 30,000, raised by the chiefs and Sirdars of the Deccan and Southern Maratha country to memorialise the visit of H. R. H. the Duke of Edinburgh to India, is to be applied, Rs. 20,000 to the formation of an endowment for the Female Normal School at Poona, and the remainder to establish a University fellowship of Rs. 500 per annum.

THE MUGGUR PEER MURDER.—The three soldiers of H.M.'s 66th Regiment, charged with the murder of a man on the Muggur Peer-road, were again arraigned before Mr. Gibbons, the city magistrate, on Saturday last, when charges were framed against them under the Penal Code. After the usual question, Dr. Hopkins was asked by the Magistrate whether he would go to Bombay, or the apothecary in charge of the Civil Hospital. Dr. Hopkins replied that he would, whereupon he was put into the witness-box, and examined. He deposed to the effect that he examined the body of the man who was killed, Meya Vassaya, on the morning of the 10th March. There was a wound on the left side about three-quarters of an inch broad, and about two inches and a-half deep; it might have been caused by a sharp cutting instrument, like a chisel. The wound was the cause of death. Dr. Hopkins said, in reply to a question by the magistrate, that he did not examine the injuries inflicted on the other men, but left them to the apothecary, Mr. DeSouza. The magistrate then informed Dr. Hopkins that it would be necessary for Mr. DeSouza to proceed to Bombay also, to give his evidence in the High Court there as to the nature and extent of his injuries. The soldiers were committed to stand their trial at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court of Bombay, to be held in June next.—Scindian, May 3.

BEYOND THE SIND FRONTIER.—We left the forces of the Shah Ghazee and those of Ali Khan Jamote, opposed to each other at a respectful distance, each chief refusing to throw the gauntlet. Advices received yesterday state that Ali Khan, with about one hundred followers, while passing from one village to another, about four miles from Beyla, was surprised by three hundred men of the Ghazee's forces, who had two guns with them. A fight took place, in which the surrounding villagers joined with Ali Khan, who had thus about five hundred men on his side. The Ghazee's forces were routed, leaving fifty men dead on the field. The casualty on the side of Ali Khan's forces amounted to about thirty. Ali Khan has issued a proclamation to the people in the territories adjacent, prohibiting payment of revenue to the Shah Gazee or his nominees. Intelligence of the reverses which had befallen the Shah Ghazee's forces reached the Khan, at Bhag at the time, and he forthwith ordered five hundred sowars to be despatched to the assistance of the Shah Ghazee. When the Khan of Khelat was at Bhag he received a letter from the sirdar in charge of his affairs at Khelat, in which, amongst other things, it was stated that a servant of a certain chief in Khelat had committed adultery in his zenana, and that it was the chief's intention to punish the culprit by means of castration. The Khan got quite excited at this, and on the very day of the receipt of the letter despatched a message by a kossid on a swift-going camel to Khelat, wherein he distinctly stated that such a mode of punishment as that mentioned would not be allowed in his dominions, because he said when last year a man guilty of the same offence was punished by castration by his durbar, the British Sirkar, who obtained intelligence of the affair, expressed their entire disapproval of such a proceeding, and with which disapprobation the Khan was satisfied.—Scindian, May 6.

AN OLD SOLDIER ON THE INDIAN ARMY.—The following appeared in the Times of India:—"Sir,—It is amusing to observe the outburst of indignation on the appointment of Major Fagan to the officiating appointment of Wing Officer, 1st Beloochees. How ready people are who fancy they have a grievance to rush into print. Self only is, I fear, the sole consideration. Because Major Fagan has been a very lucky man (most likely he is already Lieutenant-Colonel) therefore partiality, favour, and affection are immediately conjured up as the grounds of the valuable appointment conferred on this officer. Now I happen to know that Major Fagan would have felt deeply grateful to his kind friends at head-quarters if they had permitted him to remain where he was, instead of transporting him from a Paradise to a remarkably warm region, and, unless protected by his rights as a Local, from higher to lower pay. I take, however, exception to the appointment as showing the rotten system in force in officering the Native regiments, as deeply affecting the welfare of the Native Army, its discipline and its organisation. Major Fagan joins the Beloochees (bear in mind) against his wishes, for a few months only, when the return of Lieutenant-Colonel Hogg displaces him. What interest can he have in even trying to know his men? With what heart can he attend his morning orderly-room or his evening inspection? Ah! and what is infinitely of far greater importance, what heart will the men of his wing have in bringing their petitions or their grievances before him? Do you think they don't know that he is there but for a season? Government little know how these things are canvassed in the lines, and the comparisons drawn between the good old times when the men felt they had officers who regarded them as their baba log, and the present, when it is one perpetual chopping and changing. The zeal of the Native Army is a thing of the past. Can it be wondered at? One feeling pervades those serving with it—viz., that the Government care neither for its efficiency nor for its welfare. Commanding officers are little more than nonentities. With powers reduced, interfered with in every possible way, and no officer looking upon his regiment as his home, as of old, will any one come forward and say it is not all a veritable chaos? In the Bonus question, Sir A. Spencer showed himself the friend of the officers, and his minute ought to be gratefully remembered; let him earnestly enquire into the state of the Native Army, uncoil himself from the net [his Head quarters Staff. Is there a station or a regiment in the service that is not howling for answers to letters, &c.?] which is strangling him, seek information from those commanding regiments, many of them men who have devoted their lives to the Native Army, and his Excellency will probably be able, by imparting a healthier tone throughout the Army, to leave a name that may yet be affectionately remembered by the—BOMBAY ARMY.—Mhow, April 29."

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 13.—The market, owing to the continued absence of any demand for the interior, has generally been in the same dull state, and a decline of ¼ anna per piece is noticeable in some descriptions of Grey Goods; but a fair business has been done in Grey Yarns, without, however, any advance in prices. GREY GOODS: A decline of ¼ to 1 anna per piece has taken place in 6¼ lbs., 7 lbs., 8¼ lbs., 39-inch Shirtings, in 50-inch 5¼ lbs Madapollams, and in 6 lbs. T-Cloth. For Shirtings the demand is small; Madapollams are steady; in T-Cloths sales are difficult. Jacconets and Mulls are in scarce supply, and no transactions in them have taken place. DYED and PRINTED GOODS continue quiet. Madapollams, Rs. 2-8 to 2-13½; Jacconets, Rs. 2-8; White Ground Prints, Rs. 4-9 to 5-3. TURKEY RED GOODS: The market is again weaker; a few pieces only of Mulls and Jacconets have been sold. No transactions have taken place in other kinds, offers being lower than houses can accept. YARNS have been steady, and a good business has been done, but without any change in prices.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 13.—COTTON: Notwithstanding the discouraging nature of the earlier telegrams, large purchases of cotton have been daily made in Bombay and up-country by European houses, and an advance of Rs. 3 to 10 per candy may now be quoted. The opinion appears now to be pretty general that prices in Liverpool will not decline further, and that an advance will place in autumn, when stocks are reduced. The purchases made in Bombay for export aggregate about 15,500 candies, which, moreover, does not include the business done up-country. The market closes firm. Below we append our quotations, viz.:—

ALLOWANCES, DIVISIONAL COMMAND.—The Government of India has ruled that the allowance of Rs. 120 granted to the senior officer falling into command of a divisional head-quarters station during the absence of the general officer on duty, and to the officer similarly falling into the command of the head-quarters station of a brigade command, should be in addition to the allowance for the command of the regiment which the senior officer may hold. When in either case the senior regimental officer so succeeding to the command of a head-quarters station has no regimental command, he will draw the allowance of Rs. 400, in accordance with the general order dated July 19, 1861, No. 377.

OFFICERS ON LEAVE DOING DUTY.—With reference to G.G.O. No. 515 of 1864, the following rules laid down by the Government of India are published :—"An officer on leave, who may be placed on duty at the place in which he is residing during leave, has no claim to passage at the public expense when he returns to his regiment, whether he is detained beyond the expiration of the leave or not. But if he is sent on duty to any other place, he is of course entitled to travel to that place at the public expense, and also back again, on the termination of the duty, to the place or station where he was residing on leave when ordered away on the duty, if he wishes to return there, or to his regiment if it be not farther off than that place or station."

PAY OF UNCOVENANTED MEDICAL OFFICERS.—In Financial Resolution No. 2,599, dated Sept. 17, 1867, it was laid down that the service of an uncovenanted medical officer towards the periodical increments in the revised scale of pay for his class will reckon from the date of his entering on his duties, on his first permanent appointment to the medical charge of the sudder station of a district, if the incumbent was not then a sub-assistant surgeon, otherwise from the date on which he ceased to be a sub-assistant surgeon. This rule shall continue in force for sub-assistant surgeons who may hereafter be promoted to the status of uncovenanted medical officer; but all who are now serving on the footing or status of uncovenanted medical officers, who previously held permanent medical charge of the sudder stations of districts as sub-assistant surgeons, are allowed to count such service towards the periodical increment of their pay as uncovenanted medical officers.

REPORTS.—The Commander-in-Chief directs the publication of the following Horse Guards letter of Feb. 15, for the information and guidance of officers of the British army returning to England :—"Numerous cases having recently occurred in which officers arriving from India have stated, in reply to letters from this department, that they are not in possession of a copy of the local general order under which they return home, and which they are required to transmit to the adjutant-general when reporting their arrival in this country, I am desired by H.R.H. the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to request that your lordship will give such instructions on this subject as shall enable them to comply with the orders contained in para. 692 of her Majesty's regulations and orders for the army. It is of course to be understood that the document in question is not their certificate of leave of absence on War Office form No. 1,121, as they are required to keep that in their own possession, or to deposit it with their regimental agents." Whenever general officers commanding divisions or districts propose leaving their head-quarter stations, whether on leave or on duty, they will invariably report to the adjutant general, Poona, the dates of their contemplated departure and return. The report should, whenever practicable, be despatched in sufficient time to admit of its being received at Poona before the general officer actually leaves the station.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF A MEDICAL COLLEGE AT ALLAHABAD.

Resolution of the N.W.P. Government, dated Allahabad, the 6th May, 1871.

On the 28th January, 1870, this Government submitted a proposal for the establishment of a medical college at the seat of Government, and again on the 25th May recommended acceptance of an offer from his Highness the Maharajah of Vizianagram to contribute £20,000 towards the building and endowment of the college.

On the 7th December, 1870, a reply was received from the Supreme Government, commending the liberality of the Maharajah; recognising the desirability of the projected institution, and the benefit to be anticipated from it to the public service; and stating that "the Governor-General in Council will be quite prepared to give as liberal a contribution, both towards the building and the endowment of the College as the state of the finances may permit, provided that, with this assistance, the Maharajah's donation and those of others will suffice to carry out these objects, and that no further outlay, annual or otherwise, is thereby entailed upon Government; and provided, also, that all the future requirements of the College be met from local sources."

A scheme and estimate for such an institution were accordingly called for by H.E. in Council, and a project was submitted in reply on Jan. 16, 1871, showing the assistance which, in his honour's view, might be reasonably looked for from the Government of India, and the balance of expenditure that would devolve on local sources.

In reply, on Feb. 21, 1871, the Lieut. governor was called upon to state what these local sources were, whether local subscriptions or otherwise; on the receipt of which information it was promised that the proposal submitted would be taken into consideration.

On the 16th March, 1871, it was explained that, with the expected aid of the Imperial Government, the balance of the expenditure would be borne by the local funds of these provinces.

The final reply, dated 15th April, declares that his Excellency in Council finds himself unable to entertain the proposal to assist the proposed College, as it would involve a deviation from the financial policy recently inaugurated.

The project must, in consequence of this refusal, be for the present abandoned.

Though unable to avail himself of the munificent contribution offered by the Maharajah of Vizianagram, his Honour does not the less highly appreciate the enlightened liberality which dictated the offer, and has much pleasure in making this public acknowledgment of the same.

And, while deeply regretting the disappointment, the Lieutenant-governor sees no reason to doubt that the project may hereafter be revived, possibly on a smaller scale, as the provincial finances may admit. With this view, the correspondence will be published in the Government Gazette of these provinces, and printed in the "selections" from the records of this Government.

THE WAR-OFFICE SANITARY COMMISSION FOR INDIA.

The following is a letter from the Secretary of State for India, dated April 4, 1871, to the Right Hon. the Governor of Bombay, enclosing copy of a letter from the War-Office Sanitary Commission regarding the outbreak of cholera in the Thurr and Parkur districts in 1869:—

Sir,—The despatch of your Excellency in Council, dated Nov. 19, No. 34, of 1870, relative to the outbreak of cholera in the Thurr and Parkur districts, 1869, has been considered by me in Council.

2. In reply, I forward herewith copy of a letter, dated Feb. 22, 1871, from the War-Office Sanitary Commission, containing its remarks on the reports which accompanied your despatch.

3. I entirely concur with your Excellency in Council, and with the War-Office Commission, in approving the great zeal and energy shown on this trying occasion by Major Tyrwhitt, Dr. Williams, and the Hospital assistant Bulwuntrao. The manner in which Moolrem, the extra assistant collector of Thurr and Parkuar, and the Hospital assistants Bhicujee Purab and Khundojee Roman, performed their duties, has also given me great satisfaction.—I have, &c., ARGYLL.

The following is the letter referred to, from the Secretary to the Army Sanitary Commission, to the Under Secretary of State for India, dated Feb. 22, 1871:—

Sir,—With reference to Mr. Merivale's letter of Dec. 19 last, forwarding for submission to the Army Sanitary Commission, and for any remarks they may wish to offer, copy of a despatch from the Government of Bombay, No. 34, dated November 19, 1870, with enclosures, relative to the outbreak of cholera in the Thurr and Parkur districts, together with the resolution of the Government thereon, and in returning the enclosures as requested, I am directed to acquaint you, for the information of the Secretary of State for India in Council, that this report gives an account of a very severe invasion of epidemic cholera in the above-named districts. It is believed by the medical authorities to have been imported and spread throughout the district by human agency; but the evidence of this view is by no means decisive, and Dr. Bryden, while treating the event as part of the epidemic invasion of the north-west and west of India, shows that the disease prevailed epidemically at the same period in the Punjab and Sind. The Commission desire to express their high appreciation of the manner in which this severe outbreak must have been dealt with by the Political Superintendent, Major Tyrwhitt, and by Dr. Williams, Superintendent of Vaccination in Sind, who volunteered his services for the occasion; nor ought the efficient services of native officers and hospital assistants to be unremembered.

Although a calamity of this magnitude has been of rare occurrence in these districts, the Commission would venture to suggest whether the experience of the epidemic does not indicate the necessity for making some more permanent provision for medical attendance within the districts alluded to.—I am, &c., J. J. FREDERICK, Secretary to the Army Sanitary Commission.

REDUCTION OF POLICE.—Colonel Bruce, Inspector-General of Police, had recommended to Government the necessity of reducing the police forces throughout India. The Colonel visited Sind a few years ago, and after obtaining data as to the cost of the police, suggested, in concert with the Commissioner, a reduction of that department. The suggestion has met with the approval of the Government of India, and already instructions have been received to dispense with the inner jail guards, and to employ well-conducted convicts in their places. At the Andamans the police entertained there for guarding the islands have been discharged, and a corps of convicts has been raised for guarding the men transported there. —Sindian.

CONSULAR.—Last Friday's Gazette states that the Queen has approved of Mr. Edmund Serruys as Consul-General in India for the King of the Belgians.

APPOINTMENT.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint James Robert Mosse, Esq., to be Director of Public Works and Director-General of the Railway in the Island of Ceylon.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S ELEPHANT.—The elephant brought by the Duke of Edinburgh from India, whilst on its way to town on Friday night from Plymouth, attempted to get out of the horse-box, and crushed its keeper to death in its endeavour to escape.

MAJOR MILLER, LATE R.E.—The Secretary of State for War has been pleased to appoint Major Miller, late Royal Engineers, now in charge of the district military prison at Aldershot, to be governor of the Arbour-hill Military prison, Dublin in the room of Major Bacon, late Royal Engineers, who has resigned that appointment.

OUTRAM'S STATUE.—The full-length bronze figure of the late General Outram has just been hoisted on the pedestal erected for it within the last few days in the ornamental garden on the Thames Embankment near Charing-cross Bridge, and it will shortly be uncovered. The height of the monument is about twenty feet; the pedestal is of polished granite, and its four corners are ornamented with trophies of arms, shields, and warriors' head coverings finely executed in bronze, and typical of the races the gallant officer was opposed to in his campaigns.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, as colonel of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, presided at the annual dinner of the regiment, which took place on Tuesday evening last, at Willis's Rooms. Amongst the officers present were Field-Marshal Sir George Pollock; Generals Sir R. Dacres and Sir G. Brooke; Lieutenant-Generals Sir J. Alexander, G. Twemlow, and N. Warde; Major-Generals R. C. Moore, R. N. Crawford, Sir John St. George, Sir E. C. Warde, C. Lucas, J. Abbott, Sir C. Dickson, Sir J. Brind, W. H. Askwith, C. J. Dalton, N. M. Eardley Wilmot, G. W. Y. Simpson, Gambier, Rowan, Marriott, Anderson, Cockburn, Dalton, Elliott, and many others. The band of the Royal Artillery was in attendance, and played during dinner.

ALBERT ASSURANCE COMPANY.—Lord Cairns, the arbitrator in the Albert Life Assurance case, held a sitting on Thursday last. There was a large attendance of counsel and solicitors, and the question raised was the liability or non-liability of the Family Endowment Society on policies or other contracts issued or arising out of business transferred to the Albert Life Company, as far as such liability or non-liability is not determined by cases decided by the Lord Chancellor or Court of Appeal in Chancery. There were three cases selected as being representative ones—namely, Lee's case, Kennedy's case, and Bowden's case. In the first of these Mr. Kekewich argued the points, instructed by Messrs. Markby and Tarry. The arbitrator decided that Mr. Lee must remain upon the list of contributories, costs to depend upon whether the case was fairly a representative one. Kennedy's case was then taken. Mr. J. Westlake appeared in support of the case, which is still proceeding.

P. and O. STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The report of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, to be presented at the meeting on the 6th inst., states that the business of the undertaking during the six months has been carried on under considerable depression, arising from the unsettled state of affairs on the Continent and the effects of severe competition. The receipts consequently show a diminution as compared with the corresponding period of former years. The reductions in some of the more important items of expenditure have, however, been maintained, and the directors recommend the declaration of a dividend of 3 per cent., free of income tax, for the half year ending March last. The opening of the Suez Canal has had the natural effect of introducing a considerable change in the course of passenger traffic to and from the East. Many of the screw steamers placed on that line for commercial purposes have a certain amount of accommodation for passengers, so that, in addition to the competition of the fine sailing ships, via the Cape, the company has to encounter opposition of a more direct nature. Under these circumstances the directors, while feeling that the company's vessels present superior advantages for the accommodation of the public, considered it would be for the interest of the proprietors so to modify the rates of passage-money as to assimilate them more nearly to those of their competitors, and a general abatement, equivalent to about 20 per cent., was consequently brought into operation about the middle of March.

MADRAS IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.—The half-yearly meeting of this Company was held on May 30, Mr. J. Thompson in the chair, when the report was taken as read. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said the company's Toombuda project, between Soonkasala and Cuddapah, would be completed by the 1st of July next. There would be few additional works to construct, so as to irrigate an additional 150,000 acres of land. As an engineering work, available for practical use, it reflected great credit on those who constructed it. Until the canal and works became consolidated the cost of maintenance would be heavy. It was estimated that the cost of repairs and expenses of management would be about £22,000 a year. Against this the engineer estimated that 8,880 acres of land would be irrigated, which, at six rupees per acre, would produce £4,890 for the first year. In 1872 the receipts would amount to £12 000. in 1873, to £20,000, in 1874 to £27,000 from irrigation alone. When the whole of the land took water of the company, the revenue, he thought, would amount to £160,000 a year, and admit of a dividend of 8 per cent. per annum on the whole of the capital and loan—£1,600,000. For the present the directors had sufficient funds to meet the difference between the receipts and the expenditure. As an instance of the magnitude of the main Canal, it carried at Kurnool a supply of water fifteen times greater than that of the whole supply to London by all the existing water-companies. The prospects of the company from navigation looked very favourable, and eventually he believed that, with an additional outlay of £600,000, required for making the necessary reservoirs to store the water for the other six months of the year, and thus make the works complete, the result would be a dividend of 14 per cent.

GREAT SOUTHERN OF INDIA.—The annual general meeting of this company was held at the London Tavern, Mr. J. Chapman in the chair. The report was held as read. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said nothing of great interest had occurred since the last meeting. The gross receipts for the year 1870 amounted to £70,962 and the working expenses to £42,657, leaving the net receipts £28,315, against £25,644 in 1869. There was a decrease in the passenger traffic of £3,114, in consequence of cholera that passed over Southern India, and also a decrease of £1,916 for carrying the company's own materials, but the goods traffic had shown an increase of 24½ per cent., or £5,841. The gross receipts for 1870 were £876 better than those for the year 1869. The expenses had been £42,647, or 60 per cent. of the receipts, against £44,443, or 63½ per cent. for the year 1869, showing a decrease of £1,796 in the expenses, making the improvement in the net receipts £2,672 as compared with those of 1869, although the revenue was chargeable with the maintenance of twenty-four additional miles of railway. The attention of the staff was now directed to the keeping down of expenditure as much as possible. The number of passengers carried was 793,755 during the past year, and the total number carried since the opening of the line had been 4,603,341, without encountering any casualty. The company had recently been allowed to replace the cargo of general stores that had been lost in the Salamanca. They would be sent out to India via the Suez Canal. The progress of the company last year had been slow, but he hoped the Government would soon allow them to proceed with the works of the extension line, as the money subscribed for that purpose was at present lying idle. The extension works were to be constructed on the new narrow guage. Mr. Roupell, a director, seconded the motion for the adoption of the report and statement of accounts, which was carried unanimously. It was stated that the extension line. 215 miles in length, was to be constructed on a narrow guage of 3ft. 3⅜in. to Tuticorin. The original design was for a guage of 5½ft., and they had to reduce the original estimates for the narrow guage. The retiring directors, Mr. J. Chapman and Captain Mangles, were re-elected, and also Mr. Nelson, the retiring auditor. The proceedings concluded with thanks to the chairman and directors.

EASTERN BENGAL.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held at the Guildhall Tavern; Mr. J. F. Leith in the chair. The report was taken as read. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, congratulated the proprietors on the successful completion and opening of the Goalundo Extension line, which gave them a direct communication from Calcutta to the Brahmapootra. The progress of the traffic on the original line had been considerable. For the half-year ending the 31st of December, 1870, the gross receipts amounted to £123,568, against £100,990 in the same half of 1869, showing an increase of 22·36 per cent. The working expenses amounted to £66,824, against £59,754 in the corresponding half of 1869, showing an increase of £7,070, or 11·83 per cent., which was moderate. The net receipts for the past half-year amounted to £56,744, against £41,185 in the same period of 1869, showing an increase of £15,559, or 33·77 per cent. The net receipts on the main line for the past half-year amounted on the capital expended on the main line and extension line to upwards of 4 per cent. per annum, while that received in the correspondiug half of 1869 was not much more than 3 per cent. The jute trade was almost exclusively confined to the company's railway. In 1851 only about 584 cwts. were exported, but in the past year 3,500,000 cwts. were exported. The present jute crop was a very large one, and the prospects of the company were very encouraging. The flotilla was being worked satisfactorily, and yielded a profit on the working. The gross receipts of the railway and steamer traffic for the first fourteen weeks of the current half-year showed an increase of £13,300 as compared with those of the corresponding period last year. The capital account showed that £2,698,873 had been expended, leaving a balance of £118,791, and he believed that about £50,000 additional would complete all the works of the company. They would make a call in June next, which would complete their authorised share capital; but the amount to be received was only £11,142, as the remainder had already been paid up in advance of calls. After some complimentary remarks by Mr. Balfour and other proprietors as to the position of the company and state of the line and works, the report and statement of accounts were unanimously adopted; thanks were voted to the chairman and directors, and also to Mr. Leslie, the engineer-in-chief, for his successful efforts in completing the Goalundo Extension Railway.

HEART-DISEASE IN THE ARMY.—That heart-disease still continues among the most dreaded and fatal afflictions of the British soldier is proved by the report from the Army Medical Department just issued. More than half a full regiment yearly fall victims to the disease, which, reduced to pecuniary value alone entails a loss to the State of about £57,800 a-year for deaths and invaliding. The opinions as to the causes of the prevalence of heart-disease in the Army, have hitherto been as varied as the preventive suggestions. Premature enlistment, heavy pack-drill and tight-fitting uniform, intemperance, and the habits of tropical climates, have doubtless each augmented the roll of victims; but the two former are now recognised by medical authorities as the chief causes. To some extent the lightening of the soldier's kit, and the lessening of heavy drill, have remedied the one cause; but the evil of enlisting youths at too early an age remains in force. In an able essay on the subject, Dr. Carbon (of the 21st Hussars) draws a similitude between the case of the young soldier of eighteen years and the thorough-bred racehorse at eighteen months. Though the colt may at that age go through his training, veterinary surgeons think it extremely likely to break down in the race. The same is said of the immature lad, who, when called on to endure the hardships of a campaign, "has on too many well-known occasions lamentably failed, crowding the military hospitals and embarrassing the movements of generals." The First Napoleon, so we are reminded, complained bitterly on this subject after the battle of Leipsic. The Duke of Wellington, Sir De Lacy Evans, and the Duke of Cambridge, with many others, have borne testimony to the inefficiency of young soldiers in war. Pensions are now reckoned from eighteen years of age, but it is believed that youths of still fewer years commonly get into the ranks. It requires no very keen scientific discernment to perceive that upon such an ill-developed class army drill may conduce to heart disease. Nor can this be remedied unless the suggestion that no recruit under twenty-one years of age should be received into the Army in time of peace be acted upon. But would sufficient men be forthcoming to keep the regiments at their necessary strength? The difficulty which is known to have existed since last year in getting 20,000 men to fill the vacancies of those just previously discharged does not favour this assumption. And the fact that the military surgeons already reject a third of the recruits inspected only adds to the doubt. Could not a system of light drill for recruits under twenty-one be adopted, by which the germs of heart disease shall not be engendered?—Globe.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, May 20; Agra and Madras, May 18; Calcutta, May 17.

NOTHING new is reported from Simlah, and very little from anywhere else in India. One touching incident comes from Bombay, where General Barrow had arrived on his journey home. So strong is the affection which the new Chief Commissioner of Oudh has evoked during his official career from the Talookdars of that province, that they begged to have the honour of escorting him personally to Bombay. The General in the kindliest terms of course declined the proffered token of esteem. He had hardly reached Bombay however, when he found that two of these talookdars, one a Hindoo, the other a Mohammedan, had come thither of their own motion, in spite of General Barrow's dissuasive letter, in order to accompany their beloved Commissioner on board his ship. It is comforting to think that there are yet a few Englishman in India who can inspire the natives with such a feeling towards them, and we hope that in spite of recent provocations to the contrary the day is still far off when all the old ties of personal friendship between governors and governed in India will be altogether loosened. In the present instance the friendship seems to have been cemented during the Mutiny, for one at least of the talookdars is said to have been the same chief who gave General and Mrs. Barrow shelter from the perils of that troublous time. We are glad to hear of the improvement reported in the General's health, and trust that a sufficient rest in this country will enable him to resume his duties among a people whose goodwill may be held to reflect the warmth of his own strong regard for them. General Barrow left Bombay by the last mail steamer, and Sir George Couper is to officiate for him in Oudh.

FURTHER tidings received at Bombay from the Persian Gulf confirm the rumour that Major Way, the Political Agent at Muscat, had died by his own hand. It appears that he shot himself, most likely in the frenzy of a brain fever, for he was on the point of being transferred to Zanzibar. Terrible accounts of the famine in Persia continued to reach Bombay; among others a story of fifty children having been killed and eaten by the starving Mohammedans of Yezd.

THE policy of reinstating Atta Mohammed Khan in his old lordship over a part of the Hazara frontier has been justified by the issue of a recent raid from the Black Mountain. On the 4th May a band of raiders came down to attack the village of Kewal in the Agror district. But news of their approach reached Atta Mohammed Khan in time to enable him to forestal the attack. When the raiders, who are said to belong to the Khan Keyl tribe, found the village ready to receive them, they turned tail after firing a few random shots which wounded two or three of the Khan's men. They were chased some way up the hill with considerable loss, and have not since ventured to renew the attack. Had the Khan been still a prisoner at Lahore, it is not unlikely that serious damage might have been done before our troops could have come up to the scene of danger.

FROM the Indian papers we get some particulars of the accident that ended in the death of General Peter Innes, as reported by telegraph some weeks ago. It seems that the General had been stooping down to prune a rosebush in his garden at Simlah. In rising up suddenly, he overbalanced himself and fell backwards about sixteen feet down the bank, breaking some of his ribs. Having for some time before been in weakly health, he never recovered from the shock of his fall, but died on the 10th May, and was buried two days afterwards. Lieut.-General Innes was a Bengal cadet of infantry in 1824. He gained his brevet majority for the Gwalior campaign of 1843, with a bronze star for Maharajpore. He also served through the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6 against the Sikhs, and gained a medal and clasp for Ferozeshuhur, with the brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, being still only a Captain in the 14th N. I. He was a Colonel in 1854, Major-General in 1858, and Lieutenant-General in 1870. As Commandant of the Simlah Volunteers General Innes was widely esteemed, and a pretty large circle of friends will regret his death, which took place in his sixty-seventh year.

ACCORDING to trustworthy intelligence received by the Friend of India, General Goldsmid has really finished the preliminary business of settling the Persian boundary on the side of Mekran and Khelat. The remainder of the work will be completed at Teheran, whither the Commissioners have proceeded from Kurrachee. At Teheran they are to meet the Persian Commissioner, and there is every reason to believe that ere long, with the help of our Minister and the Persian Foreign Office, this part of General Goldsmid's task will be brought to a satisfactory issue. With regard to the Seistan Frontier, there is small chance of an early settlement pending the present troubles in Afghanistan. It is not so easy as the Broad Arrow supposes to pronounce on the merits of the rival claimants. In point of historical fact, Persia seems to have a stronger claim to that oft-disputed province, than Afghanistan. It formed part of her old possessions, it has never for many years together remained in Afghan hands, and for some years past its chiefs have virtually acknowledged the Persian supremacy.

AMONG the arrivals at Bombay by the last mail were Lieut.-General Haines, Commander-in-Chief of Madras in the place of General McCleverty, and Sir Charles Sargent, Judge of the Bombay High Court.

A TELEGRAM of June 7 from Calcutta confirms the reported capture of Herat. It appears that Yakoob Khan, Shere Ali's best general in the war that replaced him on his father's throne, made a feigned attack on the city, and while most of the Governor's troops were engaged in repelling it, a gate on the other side of the city was opened from within by some of Yakoob's secret partisans. Several of the Ameer's chief officers are said to have been killed.

SHERE ALI is paying the penalty of his weakness or obstinacy in having overlooked the right of his elder son, Yakoob Khan, to succeed him on the throne which Yakoob had helped so greatly to win back. The Ameer's ill-timed preference for his youngest boy may yet prove his ruin, if Kandahar should fall to Yakoob as well as Herat. He has certainly taken steps to avert such a disaster by sending the Kandahar troops off under their doubtful Governor towards Furrah, and filling up their place with picked troops from Kabul. Leaving the Khyberies for the present to themselves, he has summoned the Jellalabad troops to Kabul, and secured the Bamian Pass with a strong garrison against a sudden rush of Abdurrahman Khan from Maimanah in Turkistan. Nevertheless, the sky around him looks black enough, with two such leaders at once in the field as his son Yakoob and his nephew Abdurrahman. Yakoob's force, six thousand strong at the beginning of May, was daily swelling its numbers, and none of the Ameer's generals can match him in the art of war. Feramorz Khan may possibly hold him in check for a time, but it is more than a chance whether the old Kandahar army will not fraternise with Yakoob Khan. Shere Ali is said to be making all kinds of suasive or stirring appeals to the loyalty and warlike fervour of his soldiers, but somehow "his recruiting-booths were but sparely attended." People are wondering whether the Indian Government will help the Ameer at all in his present strait. If the Government is wise, it will not mix itself up any further with the internal politics of so distracted a country as Afghanistan. Lord Lawrence's policy was, after all, the best.

SAYYID TURKI appears to have made his footing perfectly good in Muscat. The re-establishment of order in the Persian Gulf will tend greatly to develop the growing trade of those parts. According to Colonel Pelly, 200 chests of opium have already been shipped from the Gulf to Aden on their way to China. Meanwhile, a busy trade in slaves was being driven by the Arabs in the neighbourhood and even within the limits of Zanzibar. Dr. Kirk, our Political Agent at the latter place, has given the captain of the Columbine some useful hints as to the likeliest places for intercepting the slavers on their way to their destined goal.

WE are sorry to see that the splendid offer of £20,000 from the Rajah of Vizianagram towards building and endowing a Medical College at Allahabad has fallen for the time being on barren ground. Economy is the word just now at the capital of the North-West Provinces, and so, after much consideration, the Lieutenant-Governor declares himself unable to help forward the proposed College, "as it would involve a deviation from the financial policy recently inaugurated." The Rajah of course is warmly complimented, and hopes are held out of a similar project in the future on a smaller scale.

IF strength of assertion could establish any fact, Sergeant Ballantine must at this moment be out in India, engaged in defending the Wahabi prisoners at Patna. But as he is probably at the date of this writing busy in watching his client's cross-examination before Sir W. Bovill, we can only suppose that some of our Indian contemporaries have allowed their imaginations a little too much play. With regard to the Patna prisoners the Calcutta Judges have refused to order their removal to Calcutta, on the plea that no sufficient reason had been given for such a transfer. The prisoners still have the right of subsequent appeal to the Higher Court. Their trial was to begin on the 29th May. Mr. Anstey and a great many witnesses had already started for Patna.

A MADRAS telegram informs us that No. 1 Company of the 19th N.I. has been finally disbanded at Madras on its return from Singapore, in compliance with the recent Order of the Madras Government.

THE Mohammedan volcano, which in India is seldom perfectly quiet, broke out of late with ominous violence at Bareilly and Phillibeet, both in Rohilkund. In spite of every precaution the Mahommedans at both places, in celebrating the Mohurrum, got up a furious affray with the Hindoos who were celebrating the Ramnowmie. At Bareilly several lives were lost, a Hindu temple plundered, and the city given over to tumult until the arrival of a strong detachment of troops. At Phillibeet the riot bordered on an insurrection, which nothing but the cool courage of two English officers and a few sowars held in check until the troops so urgently needed came to their help. For several hours this handful of brave men kept the crowd from entering the Hindu quarter of the town, and thus averted what might else have proved a ruinous disaster.

As two people starting from opposite points of the compass may yet be travelling towards the same goal, so it appears that the Moolvies of Mohammedan India have lately been arguing from exactly opposite premises to a common conclusion. One set of learned doctors at Bahar have ruled that Mohammedans in India ought not to enter on a Jihad, or religious war, against their masters, because India itself is a Dar-ul-Harb, or Land of Conflict. Another set of doctors in Calcutta have declared the unlawfulness of a Jihad against the English because India is a Dar-ul-Islam, or Land of Islam. It appears therefore that India is and is not a Mohammedan country; but that in either case Mohammedans in India are in no way called upon to plot rebellion against the British Government. Those worthy Mussulmans who like the conclusion will not look too closely into the premises. It will be enough for them to know that their religious duties need no longer clash with their political. But a Mussulman with a turn for logic and a strong dislike for unbelievers may invoke the reasoning of the Calcutta Doctors in defence of a conclusion utterly opposed to theirs. If India is indeed a Land of Islam, it must be his bounden duty, by all the teachings of the Koran, to make war on the infidel who have in various ways insulted or ignored his creed. Turning to the judgment of the Mecca Doctors, he will be yet more strengthened in this view of the question. Those gentlemen merely affirm that India is a Land of the Faithful, a Dar-ul-Islam; leaving the faithful to draw their own inferences therefrom. We fear therefore that those Mohammedans who have hitherto subscribed towards Wahabie movements will not set much store by an illogical verdict which jars against their cherished traditions.

THE following extract from the letter of a valued correspondent in the Upper Provinces may serve to indicate one phase of local opinion on various questions of the day in India:—

"There is not very much to tell you in the shape of news from this country. Paddy Mayo has won for himself the title of 'The Headless Horseman' by his habit of riding over the face of the country at top speed, and then retiring to his Council Chamber to do and say all manner of foolish things.

"The reduction of the Income-tax will be a relief to all classes; and the class that now pays it will be able to resist oppression and bear the burden without sinking. The local taxes seem judiciously put on as a rule, and public opinion generally endorses Stephen's view that the Permanent Settlement Landowners ought to be taxed pari passu with the holders of every other description of property. But the absolute element at the bottom of it all has not yet been fully appreciated by our own statesmen; I mean the constant danger of goading the people to despair by forcing upon them questionable 'improvements' which they don't want, and then making them pay through the nose for them. It is chiefly in the Public Works that this prevails. Richard Strachey's Bill that still hangs fire is a fair instance: we are to make canals wherever we like, and then to tax the people by whose lands they pass, whether they take the water or not."

IN a letter to the Pall Mall Gazette of Friday last, Sir Bartle Frere flatly contradicts the statements repeated by the Gazette's Calcutta Correspondent, with regard to the way in which General Balfour and his colleagues on Lord Canning's Military Finance Commission cut down the military expenditure of India after the Mutiny. The statements in question, which we have heard made in England also, charged the Commissioners with that kind of economy which starves the service on the Sangrado principle, under the plea of retrenching superfluities. Sir Bartle Frere however declares from his own official acquaintance with the proceedings of the Commission, and his knowledge of the "opinions formed at the time by the officers of regiments and of store and supply departments best qualified to judge of the results" of those proceedings, that the Correspondent in question has been "entirely misled" by his informants. Sir Bartle Frere goes on to express his firm conviction that a full inquiry into Indian Army expenditure by the Finance Committee will bring out the superiority of the system maintained under Lord Canning, both in cheapness and efficiency, over that which has succeeded it. Certainly no one either in India or in England has yet offered anything like a valid answer to the charges twice made in print by Sir G. Balfour. Silence in this case means inability to disprove.

AMONG the knotty questions over which Lord Cairns may have to ponder for some time to come, as arbitrator for the affairs of the Albert Assurance Company, are the conflicting claims of policy-holders in the various companies which amalgamated with the Albert. At present his Lordship is considering the question of liability raised by the policy-holders of the Family Endowment Society, who naturally seek compensation from the company to which they originally paid their premiums. It appears however that, disregarding previous decisions on the same point of law, his Lordship tends to the opinion that the very payment of premiums to the Albert by the policy-holders of an amalgamated company amounted to such an acknowledgment of the Albert's liability as relieved the Family Endowment, for instance, from all further liability on the same score. The final decision has still to be pronounced, but such will probably be the upshot of Lord Cairns's arguments. Another point that must shortly be discussed concerns the limits of the Albert's liability towards the various bodies of claimants. If, for example, Lord Cairns decides that the liability of the Albert to the Family Endowment Society in accordance with the compact made between them is unlimited, will there be any limit to the Albert's liability towards the policy-holders also of the other company?

AMONG the new batch of Knights Commanders of the Bath we have great pleasure in mentioning the name of Major-General Thomas T. Pears, C.B., Military Secretary at the India-office for many years past. General Pears entered the Madras Engineers in 1825, became a Captain in 1838, Major in 1842, and Colonel in 1856. He retired as Major-General in 1861, and is in receipt of a good service pension. He saw fighting in the Kurnool campaign and served with Lord Gough's Army throughout the first China War, being engaged in most of the fighting that took place, from the capture of Chusan and Ningpo to the assault and capture of Chingkiangfoo. His present post has been no sinecure since the days of the Mutiny, and his new preferment implies a just tribute to his official deserts.

EXPERIMENTS IN COTTON GROWING.

MR. T. LOGIN'S interesting report to the Punjab Government on certain experiments made by him last year in cotton culture, appears to have hit a blot in the Indian methods of growing that important staple. The experiments, suggested by what Mr. Login saw during a brief visit to Egypt, were carried out on a small piece of middling ground at Bahalgurh, in the valley of the Jumna, twenty-three miles north of Delhi on the Grand Trunk-road. The size of the plot was about an eighth of an acre, and it had been under grass for several years. On the 23rd May, 1870, he began by flooding the field three or four inches deep. Two days later it was twice ploughed over. On the next day it was covered with stable refuse about three-fourths of an inch thick, and on the morrow it was again twice ploughed in the Indian fashion to a depth of about four inches. Mr. Login then proceeded to throw up furrows eight inches high at intervals of three feet. A second watering of the field should then have taken place, says Mr. Login, but by some mistake the sowing was done first and the watering afterwards. The seed was first rubbed in fresh cow-dung and then dried in the sun, according to Indian usage. Small holes two feet apart were then made at the top of the drills, and into each hole four or five seeds were dropt, and covered over with earth. When the plants grew up a few inches, they were so carefully thinned, that only one, the healthiest of them, was left in each hole untouched. In this cheap and simple process lies all the difference between Egyptian and Indian methods of culture. By sowing in drills instead of sowing broadcast, it is reckoned that an average yield six times as large, and a good deal better, than that produced by the Indian system might always be obtained. From each acre it would then be possible to raise five hundred pounds instead of less than a hundred.

In spite of the damage done by a heavy rainfall which lasted four days to the end of June, and so flooded the field that only 422 groups of plants survived out of 730, the remainder after thinning made so steady a growth, that in September some of them had reached a height of six feet and a-half, while one of them covered an area of nearly fifteen square feet. By the latter part of October several of them had grown to seven feet and a-half, covering an area of more than twenty feet square. Many of the branches were bowed down almost to the ground with the weight of the cotton-pods. One average sample forwarded by Mr. Login to the Public Works Department measured six feet three above ground, and contained 226 pods and blossoms on eighteen branches large and small. Another sample showed more than 300 pods and blossoms, but the average number of such is reckoned at about 150. On cleaning the cotton, rather more than a third of it proved to be clean cotton, the remainder being seed. Between May and October the field was six times weeded, four times ploughed, and six times watered, at a total cost, manure included, of Rs. 9.8, or about nineteen shillings. This rate of outlay would have been largely reduced had the experiment been conducted on a larger scale. The seed sown was mixed just as it came from the bazaar; out of a hundred pods, 40 bore four lobes, and the remainder only three to each pod. The net yield of cotton for the market was reckoned at more than 56 lbs., which even under quite ordinary conditions of soil and culture would represent nearly 500 lbs. to the acre.

The advantage of growing the plant in drills was cheerfully acknowledged by all who went to see the field. Between the drills, which are easy to water and weed, a cold-weather crop of wheat or barley could always be raised without trouble. Few however, except Mr. Login's immediate neighbours, would believe that such cotton plants had been raised from native seed, but in time no doubt their incredulity will be removed by the result of like experiments on a larger scale elsewhere. Mr. Login's first aim was to convince the cultivators that much larger crops could be raised by his method at no greater cost than by theirs. The natives, he wisely remembers, must creep before they attempt to walk. By-and-by the time will come to improve the quality as well as the quantity of the cotton grown. For the present Mr. Login recommends that no plant should be allowed to grow higher than five feet, in order to secure the largest possible yield. Meanwhile it is evident that the principle of his method is sound. The cotton-plant, being a sunflower, requires light and room to grow in the full sunshine. It also needs room for its roots to spread, and a regulated system of watering, which will feed the roots without touching the stem. Deeper ploughing would enable the roots to strike more freely downwards, and so diminish the space between each plant.

RECRUITING FOR THE ARMY.

If Sir William Mansfield failed to impress his countrymen in India with a high opinion of his talents as a commander, Lord Sandhurst has already illustrated the kind of aptitude which Sir William undoubtedly displayed in the Viceroy's Council. His maiden speech among the Peers on Monday last justified the compliments bestowed on him by several of the subsequent speakers. It pointed out with much force the evils of recruiting for the present periods of short service at the unripe age of eighteen. The recent orders on the subject struck him with a natural dismay, from their tendency to fill our regiments with "ungrown starveling boys." If soldiers who enlist at eighteen are allowed after three years' service to enter the Reserve, the army will be periodically drained of its best men, and none but "ignorant striplings and men of bad character" will be left in the ranks. The case indeed might be stated yet more strongly, for his Lordship feared, with General Simmons, that "many boys were attested as eighteen years old" who were only in fact seventeen. Under the old system of long service, a system which Lord Sandhurst does not defend, the evil of enlisting boys was mitigated by the fact that "the raw recruits bore a small proportion to the old soldiers." Under the new system the proportion will tend the other way. His Lordship especially denounced the cruel folly of sending raw lads out to India, where, as the doctors tell us, a great many of them are sure to die of heart-disease and other maladies. It was otherwise in the days of the East India Company, when no recruit was taken under twenty-one, and the age of enlistment could be extended to twenty-six. In the French and Austrian armies the lowest age is said to be twenty, in the Prussian twenty-one. On this point it is comforting to learn from Lord Northbrook that arrangements have been made for transferring into other regiments recruits who are deemed too young for India, and to read Lord Kimberley's assurance that in future no soldier under twenty will be sent out to India, while men of twenty and upwards will be tempted for Indian service with a bounty of one guinea each. Let us hope by the way that this new arrangement, which seems very like a return to the old methods so lately condemned, will not entail fresh burdens on the Indian Exchequer. It is certain however that a return has been ordained to the sounder policy of the East India Company with regard to the proper age for Indian recruits, inasmuch as Mr. Cardwell's statement made on Thursday in reply to Captain Talbot confirmed the assurances previously given in the House of Lords. It was quite time to think of reforming a system under which half an English regiment ordered to India may consist, like the 54th Foot for instance, of youths under twenty years of age. One regiment indeed, the 65th, which arrived last year at Agra, appears, from Mr. Cardwell's own admission, to have contained 579 youths under twenty out of a total strength of 919 men. And yet all these boys, so many of whom will die off or fill the hospitals in their first years of service under an Indian sun, were duly reported fit for that service by the medical officer appointed to inspect them.

It is easy to suggest remedies for the evil pointed out by Lord Sandhurst. With regard to Indian service the question would be simple enough, if our statesmen would only accept the good old principle of special enlistment for a local British Army in India. There is little reason to believe that recruiting under the old conditions would be harder now than it was before 1857, and we have never yet heard a single valid argument, hardly even a specious one, against the restoration of the old local garrisons. Should that however still seem impracticable to the collective wisdom of Parliament and Ministry, some other remedy must, as Lord Sandhurst puts it, be found at any cost; always supposing that young men of twenty and upwards cannot as a rule be tempted into the British Army. We should have thought indeed that, under the new conditions of short service with a qualified right of serving for twelve and even twenty-one years, a sufficient influx of full-grown recruits might always be assured from among the numbers of young men who at twenty are either in absolute want of work, or have tired of their original calling, or have some private reason for getting away from home. In these days of hunger for change and novelty, there must be plenty of young fellows who would take their chance for a few years in the army, with the choice of staying or going at the end of their time, or of falling into the Reserve, if the pay and general conditions of service were not such as to deter them from making the venture. A good many inducements have already been offered to the respectable, but few as yet to the adventurous or unstable classes. The spirit of humdrum and pipeclay still hovers dismally over the soldier's life in barracks. He has plenty of drill, but not much of the right sort; he has leisure for lounging and drinking, but not as a rule for mental or material improvement. The discipline is at once too strict and too lax, as a means of developing that kind of self-reliance which alone can raise the soldier above the level of an obedient machine.

Nevertheless we cannot but question the justice of the Duke of Cambridge's assertion that recruits of more than eighteen or nineteen are not to be had in a volunteer army like ours. Have we ever fairly tried to get them under the new conditions? Do the people at large as yet understand what those conditions are, or will shortly be when Mr. Cardwell shall have thoroughly mastered and defined the details of his own scheme? Lord Sandhurst at any rate does not despair of securing recruits old enough for all good purposes. He would make the Militia of use in feeding the Line, by recruiting youths of eighteen for the former only, and inviting them two years later to join the Line, for which no recruit under twenty should ever be enlisted on any account. In this way, he argues, you might get seven, ten, or even twenty per cent. of the militia to enter the Line, while the balance of recruits yearly needed could easily be obtained from the open market. One advantage of this scheme would be the removal of all competition for recruits between the two Services. It would also of course tend vastly to improve the Line regiments by filling them with a succession of well-grown ready-drilled recruits. And it might be so worked as to restore to each of the Line regiments its proper local connection with one of the recruiting-grounds for the Militia. Nor would the officers of the latter service have much cause for grumbling at an arrangement which would extend to the rank and file the kind of opening which Mr. Cardwell has already conceded to the commissioned ranks. The one doubtful point is, how large a percentage of recruits for the Line could thus be reckoned upon. As the Duke of Cambridge truly remarked, numbers of men go into the Militia who would never be induced to enter the Line. We are glad however to see that his Royal Highness looks upon Lord Sandhurst's principle of feeding the Line through the Militia, as "deserving of serious attention," even though its application involved "a complete organic change in our system." That indeed is likely enough; but the likelihood or even the certainty of such an issue is one of the strongest reasons for making trial of such a plan.

THE PROPOSED ALTERATIONS IN THE LEAVE RULES.

The Englishman asserts the absolute correctness of the information which it received some days ago regarding the proposed change in the Leave Rules. This week has brought the details, and they are such as to justify the indignation which the rumoured issue of the despatch created both in London and here. Some of the older members of the Council at Whitehall think that the existing Furlough Rules have created a feeling of instability and restlessness throughout the Indian services; that the interest which officers take in their work has become less steady; and that the security of the Empire is thereby imperilled. From what source the Indian Council has learned these terrible tidings remains a mystery. The first persons to whom such a state of things would have revealed itself are the Lieutenant-Governors and Chief Commissioners of Provinces. Now we venture to assert that not a single Lieutenant-Governor or Chief Commissioner has ever had to complain of the various effects which the Council at Whitehall ascribe to the Leave Rules of 1865. Those rules were promulgated after most careful scrutiny, as the sole means of removing a dangerous amount of discontent in the civil and military services. They certainly removed that discontent, and as three years have not yet expired since they were introduced, it is absolutely impossible to predict what their permanent effect may be. Indeed nothing could be more fallacious than to judge of them by the results of the two years immediately following their promulgation. For, from the very nature of the case, the immediate effect of such rules must inevitably be very different from their permanent one. Their permanent effect is to allow officers who think they need change, and who can afford to pay for it, to go home every fifth year. But their immediate result was, by lumping together sick leave and furlough in one total, to entitle a number of senior men to an accumulation of leave which under the old rules they could only have got on sick certificate. The same remark applied, although on a smaller scale, to the middle-aged ranks of the service. In former times, when a civilian retired on his pension, he resigned the service in India, but the immediate effect of the rules of 1868 was to enable such officers to take two years' leave on £1,200 a year at home, before sending in their resignations. The net result has been that almost all retirements from the service have of late been made in England. But this effect, from the very nature of the case, could only be temporary; for if the rules of 1868 operate as they were designed to act, officers will take their leave at steadily recurring intervals, and will have no large accumulation at the end of their service. The immediate effect of the New Rules therefore was to create a rush home of senior officers, each of whom cost the state £1,200 a-year while thus on leave. Such a rush at once told upon the disbursements at the India-office, and increased the allowances actually paid to civilians in England by over four lakhs of rupees. But it would be tedious further to insist upon the fact that this was the inevitable result of amalgamating sick leave with furlough, and thus placing an accumulation to the credit of all officers who had not had to go home on medical certificate. The effect was a purely temporary one, and one that the framers of the rules of 1868 must have foreseen. The sudden increase of leave allowances which it involved has now been reduced to some extent by cutting down the rates at which absentees were paid. No officer can henceforth draw £1,200 on furlough. The maximum is now £1,000, less deductions for the funds; and by the new Retirement Rules, an officer who has fulfilled his service can retire upon £1,000, without the four per cent. deduction towards his annuity. It will therefore be best for such officers to retire at once, and this fact alone will henceforth reduce the leave allowances by something like £10,000 per annum as compared with the past two years. It is quite possible that improvements could be effected in the working of the present rules. But such improvements will come, not from Whitehall, but from the local Governments in India, who have to watch their operation, and to adapt their provisions to the requirements of their respective provinces. We sincerely trust that, before anything is done, the local Governments will be consulted.

THE MOHAMMEDANS OF INDIA.

The Englishman views with extreme suspicion the decision of the doctors at Mecca, that stronghold of fanaticism and intolerant zeal, who declare that India is a country of Islam, but who, instead of deducing therefrom, as the Calcutta Literary Society erroneously infer, that rebellion is therefore unlawful, leave it to their intelligent co-religionists to draw the opposite conclusion, namely, that rebellion is, therefore, incumbent. In short, if India be de jure a country of Islam, it is clearly the duty of all devout Mussulmans to make it also de facto a country of Islam. But we have abundantly proved in our former articles that India has ceased to be a country of Islam, and lapsed into a country of the enemy. The present generation of Mussulmans are bound, according to their own texts, to accept the status quo. They are not responsible for it, and they are not bound, in the face of God's providence, and the immense perils in which a revolt would involve the True Faith, to have recourse to arms. When the English first extended their empire, or when the Seikhs or Mahrattas established their rule, the Muhammadans were doubtless bound to wage holy war against the infidel invaders. But upon the total subjugation of Islam in British India, and upon the complete supersession of the Muhammadan emperors by unbelieving governors, the position of the Mussulmans underwent a change. For the sake of preserving such an amount of religious and civil liberty as the new conquerors would permit, the Muhammadans by treaty and by passive submission accepted the position of subjects. In return they received the rights of subjects, and became what is technically termed in their law mustamin, or "seekers for protection." As such they obtain from their English rulers a certain amount of religious privileges (aman). Not indeed their former complete religious privileges (the aman-i-awwal of the Sirajiyah, Imadiyah, and all other texts older than the Fatwa-i-Alamgiri), but sufficient for the protection of their lives and property, and the safety of their souls. No interference is made with their prayers or public worship, and even their religious lands and foundations are respected. In return for this religious and civil liberty (aman) they accept, as their forefathers accepted, the position of subjects, and the present generation is bound to adhere to the mutual engagement which has thus sprung up, and to perform the duties of subjects to their present rulers. A Mussulman rebellion or holy war would be a breach of this engagement, and as such would be against the most authoritative texts of their law. If, however, their English rulers should first infringe the agreement by interfering with the prayers, or public worship, or lawful ceremonies of their Muhammadan subjects or with the erection of mosques, or with pilgrimage, or the adoration of "saints," &c, then rebellion (jihad) would be lawful. If, under such circumstances, rebellion, although lawful were impossible, then wholesale emigration from the accursed country (hijrat, literally flight) would be incumbent on every devout Mussulman. The various conditions under which such a flight becomes necessary have been laid down by Shah Abdul Aziz, and are given in all the law-books. We can never hope for enthusiastic loyalty from the more pious of our Mohammedan subjects. But if we behave with forbearance to their religious prejudices, and exhibit a steady integrity with regard to their civil and religious rights, we may reasonably expect acquiescence and peaceable subjection in return. Such acquiescence and subjection is now the religious duty of the present generation of Indian Muhammadans and of all succeeding ones. This is the end of the whole matter, and of the many fatwahs which have lately been published touching the duty of our Mussulman subjects to rebel against us, it is the one which is most completely borne out by the orthodox texts.

CASHMERE.—The rumour of cholera at Srinuggur has had the effect of detaining numbers of Cashmere visitors at Murree. It is possible, says the Lahore paper, that there may have been isolated cases either of cholera or diarrhœa which gave rise to the rumour, but we are assured that the statement is entirely incorrect, and that Srinuggur is in its usual state. There is therefore no longer need for alarm.

SUTTEE.—We learn from the Pioneer that a suttee took place some days ago at Rasra, in the Ghazeepore district. It is said that the victim, a woman of the Banee caste, was strongly bent on performing suttee at the cremation of her husband, but was with some difficulty dissuaded from her purpose for the moment. Some hours later, however, the impulse returned on her irresistibly. She made the necessary preparations for her own sacrifice almost unassisted, and about midnight effected her dreadful purpose. It was done almost secretly, only a very few witnesses being present. Those few, however, have been arrested.

THE AFGHAN WAR.

Since publishing the news of the fall of Herat to Yakoob Khan, urther intelligence has reached us confirming the previous accounts. We also understand that certain details have reached the local Government which, we are sorry to say, has not at once favoured the public with them. Although we have had no reason as yet to be dissatisfied with the accuracy of the frontier intelligence we occasionally publish, it is but natural to suppose that greater pains would be taken to secure accuracy for the information of Government, and we therefore beg respectfully to suggest to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor the propriety of at once favouring us with the latest news in a matter which so interests the frontier province.

Before noting the latest news that has reached us, it might be useful to our readers to briefly recapitulate the situation. A month ago Yakoob Khan, the Amir's eldest son, was in hiding in Seistan, south of Furrah; Abdool Rahman, the Amir's nephew, was in hiding in Turkistan. Mahomed Ishauk Khan, the Amir's nephew (son of Azim Khan), was also somewhere in Turkistan. Shah Newaz Khan, the son of the late Sooltan Jan, was with Yakoob. These were conspiring together. Afghanistan was on the whole quiet. The chief towns were governed by the Amir's servants, chiefly relations, as follows: Herat by Prince Futteh Mahomed, a good general, son of the Amir's uterine brother, Nuzeer Mahomed Akbar Khan, who shot Sir W. Macnaughten. Furrah was ruled by Afzul Khan, a doubtful man; Ghizni by Khoda Nuzur, an old and faithful servant of the Amir; Candahar by Sirdar Sufdar Ally Khan, a man not trusted much by the shrewd old Vizier Sheredil Ghazee, but in whom the Amir seemed to place confidence; Turkistan by Naib Mahomed Alum Khan. Now the situation is as follows: Herat under the rebel Yakoob; Abdool Rahman encamped in force at Maimanah in Turkistan; Furrah said to have also rebelled; Mahomed Alum Khan recalled from Balkh, and Khoda Nazur of Ghizni sent to take his place; Mahomed Ibrahim Khan sent to Ghiznee.

Immediately after seizing Herat Yakoob wrote to his father saying that if he promised him his rights and confirmed him in the Governorship of Herat he would live at peace.

The Amir would receive no overtures from him, but hurried on the first steps of the campaign, which is likely to prove a difficult one. He sent orders to the Governor of Candahar, to whose suspicious conduct we have on several occasions directed attention, to send off all his available troops in the direction of Furrah, while he, the Amir, marched off his own Cabul troops to occupy Candahar. This was a very wise step. If the Candaharees were faithful then much time was gained by their instant march upon Herat. If unfaithful, Candahar at least was saved, and freed from their presence. Sufdur Alley has on three several occasions lately made eager offers to send his troops for service to Cabul, and has been snubbed each time both by the Amir and vizier. Let us see how he likes the march in the other direction. Abdool Rahman was stated to be encamped at Maimanah in Turkistan, which commands the direct road to Cabul through the Bamian pass. The Amir however has secured the Bamian with a strong garrison, and has called the Jellalabad troops to Cabul. There is no fear of an attack on Cabul from the north. But how about the Khyber war, it will be asked? The Amir seems to think there is little fear there. The Khyberees of course will not leave their hills to invade his territory, and the Amir seems to think that, after all, the fault was as much that of the Jellalabad governor as the Khyber chiefs; at any rate, he won't attend to that just now, but has ordered Mir Akhor either to make terms and adjust the dispute, or at least keep them in check in company with Sooltan.

The rebellion of Yakoob has suddenly assumed an extraordinary form. Not only is Yakoob's persistent disobedience almost inexplicable, but his union with the other rebels is still more so. Shan Newaz Khan is the son of Sooltan Jan of Herat, which Dost Mahomed, the grandfather of Yakoob, so cruelly wrested from that family. So far then it is a war between Heratee and Afghan, who hate each other like poison. But Yakoob was that very governor, then a boy of sixteen, who was appointed to rule Herat after its cruel sack. His conspiracy with Shah Newaz Khan cannot possibly come to good. Abdool Rahman again fights against the Amir because he is his nephew a priori, he cannot be a true friend to the Amir's son. Ishauk Khan, too, is the son of Azim Khan, the uterine brother of Abdool Rahman; he cannot love or be subject to the son of his enemy. For supposing for a moment that the Amir died to-morrow, Yakoob would still seek "his rights" as his eldest son and heir, and his present friends would at once be his bitterest enemies. Our belief is this: Yakoob Khan is young, therefore foolish; overbearing and obstinate, therefore blind to all lines of thought but that which interests him for the moment; bigoted in religion, therefore, more liked by the fanatical people than his more liberal father is. The time will soon come when Yakoob will find that his best course would have been a filial acquiescence in his father's plans, which assuredly were mainly for the good of the country. As it is, we are informed by merchants just come from there that the people had in many places been unable to attend to their field works; that the large numbers of troops raised were a curse to every town they were located in; that prices were at famine rates and the people in despair. When two years ago the Amir was asked at Umballa if he was willing to promote facilities for trade and improvements, he replied rather bitterly, "Trade! trade will look after itself! Give me peace and everything will follow!" Peace is long, long of coming.—Indian Public Opinion, May 12.

Miscellaneous.

DEATH OF GENERAL INNES.—General Peter Innes died on May 10 at Simla from the effects of a fall in his own garden.

MAIL ROBBERY.—The Waziris robbed the mail between Kohat and Peshawar on the 12th May.

MEMORIAL TO SIR D. MACLEOD.—The fund subscribed to form a memorial to Sir Donald Macleod is to be applied in the formation of a School of Industry at Lahore.

THE EASTERN FRONTIER.—Seventy elephants have now been collected at Dacca to carry the commissariat of the troops in case of an expedition being undertaken on the Eastern frontier next cold season.

ABOLITION OF TRANSIT DUES.—The Rais of Koti has remitted all transit dues within his territory, to the great satisfaction of Government, as now all the states within the Baghalkand agency are free from transit dues.

THE WEATHER.—Throughout the greater part of India the weather has been most unusual, storms and cool winds nearly every day instead of the intense heat general in May. The crops have suffered in some parts; but, on the whole, the country has been much benefited.

GENERAL BALFOUR.—The Pioneer believes that General Sir G. Balfour is coming out as Controller-General of Military Expenditure, in the room of the late General Broome, and remarks that we may in this case expect some stirring passages of arms between him and the "most expensive of Commanders-in-Chief."

SERVICE REFORM IN THE PUNJAB.—Indian Public Opinion understands that the report of the committee on the means of dividing the Civil Service into separate executive and judicial branches has been sent up to Government. It does not know what the precise proposals are, but has little doubt that the consummation so devoutly to be wished for, of an independent judicial service, will soon become an accomplished fact.

LEGISLATIVE.—At the meeting of the Bengal Council on Saturday, May 13, the Bill for the construction of a bridge across the Hooghly was further discussed, and after some alterations in the wording and arrangement of the sections and in the rates of [illegible] in the schedule, was passed. Mr. Charles E. Bernard, of the Civil Service, lately Commissioner of the Negpur Division in the Central Provinces, has been appointed a member of the Bengal Council.

LITERARY.—We are glad to see that the valuable contributions to our knowledge of ancient Indian topography, which have lately appeared in the Calcutta Review in the shape of a translation from the Latin Elzevir of Joannes De Laët, have been published by Mr. Lethbridge, the translator, in a separate form. "The Topography of the Mogul Empire, as known to the Dutch," should find a place in the library of every Indian antiquarian.—Englishman.

LAHORE.—The Mofussilite learns from a correspondent at Lahore that after a good deal of incertitude orders have been received for many of the offices to remove a portion of their establishments and records to Murree. It was at one time in contemplation to make Simla the harbour of refuge from the rapidly approaching heats, as the Lieutenant-Governor and his principal secretaries will be in attendance there till the middle or end of August. Murree, however, has been allowed to carry the day, to the great relief of those who had already taken houses and sent for their families in advance.

ANOTHER RAID AT THE BLACK MOUNTAIN.—On the night of the 4th May an attempt was made to surprise one of the villages at the foot of the Black Mountain in Agrore; the raiders according to some accounts amounted to some hundreds, but it is believed their real number did not exceed 100. The Khan of Agrore, Atta Mahomed Khan, appears to have received some intimation of the intended attack, and sent out some of his retainers to the threatened village, at the same time taking steps for the defence of Oghie, in which place he resides. Towards morning some of the tribe came down with the evident intention of attacking a village called "Kewul" (quite down in the valley), but finding that the Khan had anticipated their arrival, and also that they had no longer any hopes of surprising the place, contented themselves with firing some shots at random into the village, thereby wounding four or five men. At daybreak they commenced to retreat, pursued for some distance up the hill by the Khan's men, who caused the raiders some loss. These raiders appear to have been chiefly Khan Kheyls, though they were probably assisted by men from other tribes. It is not anticipated that the raid will lead to any grave complications, as there have been no further reports of threatening movements on the part of the inhabitants of the Black Mountain. Pioneer, May 17.

CIVIL.—General Barrow has left Lucknow for Bombay on his way to England. He politely refused the offer of twenty of the Talookdars to accompany him to Bombay.

CENTRAL PROVINCES.—The administration of the Central Provinces has produced a most satisfactory Budget, the net result of which is, that, while not only has fresh taxation been avoided, but considerable remissions have been made, a surplus is shown of Rs. 18,235. In this calculation the balances of previous years, the special donation of Rs. 1,19,940, and the income from local funds have been omitted. A portion of the former has been allotted to pay off a deficit discovered to exist in the School Cess Fund, and a sum of Rs. 10,000 to provide clerks in the Court of Honorary Magistrates at places where there are no municipalities.

ROORKEE NEWS.—The Roorkee correspondent of the Delhi Gazette writes as follows :—"This station has been visited by two severe thunderstorms. On the night of the 9th the store godowns of the Sappers and Miners were found to be on fire, the cause of which is attributed by some to lightning, by others to the explosion of turpentine : the loss has not been serious, and to a great extent is of private property belonging to officers on leave. Last night a very large and bright planet was observed in the skies due west. It may be a comet just beginning to dawn upon us, and its appearance may account for the strange weather prevalent all over India. Could you not ask some of your astronomical readers to give us a history of this strange planet ?"

LITERALLY CARRYING IT OUT.—A correspondent informs us that a pious Roman Catholic priest at Agra, while reading the Bible with some degree of attention, overheard an irreverent conversation that was going on outside. He tried to divert his attention from that quarter, but did not succeed. Finding that he was sinning, he caught hold of a knife and literally cut off one of his ears. The pain consequent upon this was excessive and rendered him immediately insensible. On being asked the reason for this unusual and gross cruelty upon his person, he pointed out the passage in the Bible which ran thus :—"If thy right eye offend thee pluck it out, and cast it from thee, for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell."—Indian Mirror.

THE ALLEGED WAHABIES.—The full Court yesterday delivered judgment on the rule obtained on behalf of the prisoners in the case of the Queen v. Amir Khan and Hashmadad Khan, calling on Mr. O'Kinealy to show cause why the case should not be transferred for trial to the High Court from the Sessions Court of Patna, to which it had been committed. The Court was unanimously of opinion that the High Court had authority to transfer the case for trial to itself, but considered that sufficient ground had not been established to induce it to exercise its authority in this instance. The learned judges delivered separate judgments, but generally agreed in holding that, with the security afforded by there being an appeal to the High Court, it did not appear that the prisoners would not have a fair trial if the case were allowed to proceed at Patna. The rule was, therefore, discharged, but on the application of Mr. Ingram, who moved on affidavits showing that up to the time the prisoners had been unable to obtain copies of the exhibits put in on the hearing before the magistrate, it was ordered that the trial at Patna should be postponed until Monday fortnight. The judgments will be published in full hereafter.—Englishman, May 12.

SKIN GRAFTING.—The last number of the Indian Medical Gazette contains an account of three successful cases of skin grafting. This curious operation is as follows : A patient is suffering from a large ulcer. The worst is however over, and the ulcer is healing. A new skin is forming very slowly round the edge of the sore, and if left to itself would in course of time completely cover it. But nature works too slowly for modern surgery, so a piece of skin is cut from some other part of the body and planted in the sore. At first it seems to have failed, for the graft disappears, evidently absorbed into the wound, but in a few days a speck of healthy skin appears in the centre of the raw surface. The transplanted piece has, in fact, taken root. The speck now rapidly spreads, other grafts are made to take root, becoming each of them centres of a new growth, which as they expand join each other, and in a very short time cover the site of the ulcer with a smooth and healthy skin. Not long ago an experiment was tried in a London hospital of grafting a negro's skin on an ulcer of a white child, to see if the pigment cells would be reproduced. The experiment failed, as the bit of skin died, but the indignation of the public at what they considered an unwarrantable liberty taken with a white-skinned subject was curiously vehement. The authors of the cases quoted in the Indian Medical Gazette do not say whether the skin reproduced after grafting was the same colour as that of the rest of the body or of the pink colour so often seen in the scars on natives' legs. This is a point which might advantageously be cleared up.—Pioneer.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 17.—The market during the week has continued very quiet indeed. GREY SHIRTINGS : 7 and 8¼ lbs., 39-inch, about last mail's quotations, the lighter makes rather lower ; the wide widths are still neglected. GREY JACCONETS : We have no change to note in values, but the goods are still freely saleable. GREY MADAPOLLAMS and T-CLOTHS are unchanged. GREY MULLS : For 39-inch goods prices are firm ; 44-inch more saleable, but no alteration in values. The wide widths are without change. WHITE JACCONETS and MULLS have been in fair demand during the week at rates current last mail. GREY TWIST : Only a limited business has been done in 40's at slightly weaker rates ; other numbers are neglected. COLOURED TWIST : The market closes very depressed.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 17.—SALTPETRE : The sales have amounted to 350 tons, for which we quote refined 5 per cent., Rs. 6-14 to 7 ; crude, 6 to 8 per cent. refraction, Rs. 5-13 to 6-9 ; and common, Rs. 5-4 to 5-11. The stock in the market is about 750 tons. RICE : There has been a considerable rise in the price of Seeta this week, owing to a brisk demand for Australia. Other descriptions, especially middling, also show an upward tendency, the demand for England having continued steady, and we quote the latter at from Rs. 2-12 to 2-15, whilst Ballam rules from Rs. 2-1 to 2-3. LINSEED : Prices have a downward tendency, owing to a decreased demand, and large supplies being expected of the new crop. RAPESEED : For the best yellow higher rates have been offered ; there has been a good demand for other descriptions, and prices have a decided upward tendency. TORIESEED : What little business has transpired has been at a rise of fully two annas from last quotations. POPPYSEED : There have been a few contracts entered into for new seed deliverable in June and July at from Rs. 4-2 to 4-3. RAW SILK : There has been a larger business done than for some weeks past, about 134 bales of the March brand having changed hands, and about 150 bales of Native at prices ranging from two annas lower for filatures to eight annas lower for native silks. Good accounts have been received from both China and Japan of the coming crop. COCOONS : About 2,000 pieces (P. L. C. mark) have been sold at Rs. 165 per corge for the first mark.

A NEW EXPORT.—No less than twenty-two distressed Europeans were shipped from Madras for England last week by the Hotspur.

Madras.

FINANCIAL.—The Indian Daily News understands that the temporary promotions lately made in the Madras Military Financial Department are not of a permanent character. "It is to be regretted," remarks our contemporary, "the Government order did not state as much, thereby correcting the impression that an injustice had been done to the sister departments of Bombay and Bengal. On the publication of the grading of the entire department, that is for all India, hereto delayed by many conflicting claims and the absence on duty in Burmah of Major-General Norman, C.B., the Madras vacancies will be filled according to seniority."

DEATH OF MR. D. SCOTT.—We regret to learn from Moulmein of the death, under very tragical circumstances, of Mr. Duncan Scott, whose energy in following up the dacoits who infest the settlement is so favourably known. Mr. Scott was in pursuit of a desperate dacoit, whom he brought to bay about eighteen miles north of Thaton. In the encounter which ensued he appears to have been slightly wounded with a dao. He then fired at the dacoit, and, as it was subsequently found, shot him dead. Anxious to secure him, however, he sprang forward, and in the darkness fell, when his servant, who, was behind him, thinking that he had been overpowered by the dacoit, fired, and killed his master instead.

COAL AT THE GODAVERY.—The explorations for coal in the Godavery Circle have of late, the Pioneer tells us, been assiduous, but only moderately successful. The first venture at Madaran gave no promise, so the boring apparatus was carried across the river from the Nizam's into British territory, and here coal was found at a depth of 41 feet. In this boring coal was passed through in two beds of three feet each with an intervening layer of six feet of shale. Regarding the probable extent of the coal beds at Tiperpenti, no precise information has yet been obtained, but Mr. Blandford, of the Geological Survey, is at present examining the locality and is expected to report soon.

TELEGRAPHS IN BURMAH PROPER.—The King of Burmah is going to have a telegraph for the use of his subjects, and Major McMahon, the Officiating Political Agent at Mandalay, has published a translation of a Telegraph Code, or Leepeedeepeeka, compiled by one of the Ministers of the Interior, who rejoices in the name of Kyee Atwen Won Yaw Myoza Men Mengyee Menhla Maha Tseethoo. If these are fair specimens of Burmese words and names, a "code" must be highly desirable, seeing that messages in the Burmese language are to be sent by the wires. This is the way in which the codifier announces the fact which we have mentioned in two lines above:—"The present founder of the City of Mandalay or Rutapon; builder of the Royal palace; Ruler of the sea and land; Lord of the celestial elephant, and master of many white elephants; owner of the Sekvah or India's weapon; Lord of the power of life and death, and great chief of righteousness, being exceedingly anxious for the welfare of his people, in the year 1231 introduced the telegraph, a science, the elements of which may be compared to thunder and lightning for rapidity and brilliancy, and such as his Royal ancestors in successive generations had never attempted." But the minister with a long name has a long head, too, as his pamphlet shows. He is also evidently a man of business, and has issued an order to the effect that the persons employed in the work of erecting the telegraph line "shall within the year 1231, complete everything in the way of fixing posts and other matters that require to be done in the road laid down for the telegraph, and by every up-going postal boat report how much work has been done."—Englishman.

CIRCULAR OF THE MOFUSSIL COMPANY.

The Circular of the Mofussil Company (Limited) of May 19 contains the following information regarding the weather and the crops received from the cotton districts:—

"DHOLLERA, May 15.—We have had rain every day during the week. On the 10th instant there was a perfect hurricane, and the rain poured down for over four hours; the country about here is covered with water, and communication with the districts for the present cut off. Our supplies during the week amounted to about 1,500 candies only; 2,000 docras are on the road from Wudwan and other places, but the cotton when it reaches this market will be in a damaged state. From inquiries I have made I learn that about six annas of the crop still remain in the districts.

"BROACH, May 17.—I regret to report a continuance of wet and stormy weather during the week, in consequence of which business is quite at a standstill. In the Surat districts, where the rain has been heavier than in Broach, over five inches have been registered from Saturday, the 13th instant, till this morning. The weather has every appearance of the monsoon, and great damage to kupas and cotton in the open and in transit is apprehended.

"WURDHA, May 16.—Owing to better advices from the home market, prices in our market have for the last three days advanced, they are to-day Rs. 187 per candy in F. P. B. on Bombay terms, with an upward tendency. About 200 candies arrived during the week of what may be termed very fair quality. It is maintained that at least 3,000 bojas are still in the villages, which no doubt will find their way to market if prices keep advancing. The weather continues fine.

"OOMRAWUTTEE, May 17.—We have still about seventy-five candies a day coming in. Reports from outside say that there are lots of cotton cleaned and uncleaned in some towns, which are being held back for better rates. Weather has cleared up.

"SHEAGAUM, May 17.—Our supplies to this market for the week totalled about 140 candies. They will now gradually diminish until rain falls and shuts up the roads. The Coombies have started to turn up the land in many places for next year's crops. The weather has been fine, with a slight shower or two.

"KHAMGAUM, May 17.—According to the register kept in our cotton market, 105,000 bojas, or about 35,000 candies, have been received up to date, of which nearly the whole has been despatched in full pressed bales (73,483 up to 6th instant). Supplies this week show a slight increase instead of decrease over those of last week 1,200 candies having arrived, which perhaps may be accounted for by the upward movement in prices. Should this rise continue, arrivals will certainly not drop off so rapidly as they were doing a week ago.

"CARWAR, May 13.—Unsatisfactory as was my last report, I regret to say that there is still no improvement to note. Heavy monsoon weather, thunderstorms, and rain have ruled during the past week, and as a matter of course business has been almost suspended. Arrivals both here and in Compta have fallen off, probably owing to the bad roads through the black soil above Ghaut having been rendered impassable by the rain. Demand by coast dealers has been most active to fill contracts in Bombay, but in the present state of affairs the contracts run a poor chance of being completed. High prices are being paid, so that with enormous charges for shipping and triple rates of freight there must in any case result a heavy loss to dealers. Compta port has been practically shut for a fortnight past, and here about a dozen pattimars are lying waiting a favourable turn in the weather."

Miscellaneous.

DEATH OF MRS. MACKENZIE.—With a deep regret, which will be very widely felt, we record the death of Mrs. Mackenzie, the wife of Dr. John Mackenzie. But a short time among us, her youth, beauty, and accomplishments had won the regard of society and the affection of many friends. She died of exhaustion after a severe illness, from the effects of which, alas! the most tender care and the resources of science could not save her.—Bombay Gazette.

LOSS OF THE S.S. "BREADALBANE."—A telegram was received in Bombay on Saturday, May 13, by Messrs. W. Nicol and Co., from Suez, announcing that the steamer Breadalbane has been "totally lost," twenty miles east of Jeddah. The Breadalbane was a steamer of 877 tons, consigned to Messrs. Nicol and Co., and laden with a valuable cargo of piece-goods, wines, metals, and general merchandise. She left Liverpool for Bombay on the 27th March, and after several detentions during her voyage on the home side of the Canal, the cause of which has not yet been learned, started from Suez for Bombay on the 26th April. A later telegram intimates that the cargo has been landed at Jeddah in a damaged condition.

SHIP FREIGHT INWARDS.—At a special general meeting of the members of the Chamber of Commerce, held on Wednesday, March 22, it was unanimously resolved that the agreement of 1858, and as subsequently revised in 1868, regarding the payment of inward freight, be cancelled, and that in future payment should be regulated in conformity with the following resolutions:—1. "That the payment of inward freight, when stated simply in sterling, shall be made at the rate of 2s. per rupee." 2. "That the payment of inward freight when stated to be payable in sterling, at the current rate of exchange, shall be made at the current rate of first-class credit bills, at six months' sight on London."

DEATH OF CAPTAIN PRYCE.—We regret to state that Captain James Everard C. Pryce, Master Attendant and Conservator of the Port, died at his residence, in Marine Lines, on the morning of Saturday last. The deceased gentleman first felt ill on the morning of Friday in the previous week, after having slept all night in a verandah, and though he attended in his office on that day, he was so ill on the day following as not to be able to leave his bungalow. After a week of severe illness he appeared to have become much better on Thursday and Friday, and his friends were startled to learn on Saturday that he had died about one o'clock that morning. Captain Pryce, we believe, died of small-pox. Captain Pryce joined the Indian Navy, as an acting second-class second master, when very young, on Dec. 28, 1844, and on April 10 in the year following was promoted to be a first-class second master. On Sept. 13, 1850, he reached the post of master; and on April 25, 1854, joined the Bombay Dockyard as second assistant master attendant. On Nov. 1, 1859, he was promoted, becoming first assistant master attendant, and on March 25, 1868, obtained the appointment which he held at his death. He had just obtained a lengthened period of leave, and had intended to proceed to England by the mail steamer leaving on Saturday last or to-day. The funeral left for Sewree Cemetery about five o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and was attended by a number of the deceased's friends. As a mark of respect the shipping in the harbour hung their flags at the half-mast on Saturday, in response to the following circular which had been sent round in the morning by Mr. Corke, first assistant master attendant:—"In consequence of the death of Captain J. E. C. Pryce, late master attendant, the undersigned will feel obliged if the captains of merchant vessels in harbour will hoist their national flags half-mast high this day till sunset.—W. G. CORKE."—Bombay Gazette, May 20.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 20.—GREY GOODS.—Shirtings: The clearances of 39-inch goods during the week amount to about 16,000 pieces in all. In Printers no transactions have been reported, and of Madapollams we only hear of sales of 1,500 pieces 3 lbs., at Rs. 2-1½ to 2-1½. For T-Cloths there has been a most limited demand. In Mulls the transactions are 2,300 40-inch, at Rs. 1-3 to 1 per piece, according to quality. Dhoties: The sales are about 15,000 pairs, at 12 annas to Rs. 2-5½ per pair. In other pieces of Grey goods no transactions of any importance have transpired. TURKEY RED GOODS: The clearances reported are confined to 3,000 pieces dresses, at Rs. 1-2½ to 1-5½, according to quality. To effect sales of other descriptions slightly under quoted prices would have to be accepted, supplies being liberal in the hands of importers. TWIST: Prices have steadily advanced, especially for 30's Mule and 36's Water ¼ anna to ½ per lb. In Dyed Yarns there has also been more doing, and our quotations have advanced ½ anna to 1 per lb. METALS.—Copper: Braziers have been in slightly better request, at an improvement of 8 annas per cwt., but a decline of 8 annas has been established in Australian Tiles and Ingots. Yellow Metals: Braziers have improved 4 annas to 8 per cwt., but the demand is limited. Iron continues dull of sale, but prices are unchanged, with the exception of Round Nail Rods, which must be quoted Rs. 1 per candy lower. Quicksilver has advanced Rs. 4 per maund, and Sheet Lead 4 annas to 8 per cwt., while English Spelter has declined 8 annas per cwt.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 20.—COTTON: The advance to 6d. per lb. for Fair Dhollera in Liverpool has imparted great activity to the demand here, and a large business has been done, at an improvement of Rs. 2 to 3 per candy in all descriptions, except Dhollera, in which the advance has been Rs. 7 to 8 per candy. The purchases reported on European account since last mail left amount to about 25,000 bales, and the arrivals from the districts to about 50,000 bales. WOOL: The improvement advised by wire from England has induced an advance here of Rs. 5 to 10 per candy, even at which sellers are not anxious to quit their stocks, which are moderate. SEEDS.—Linseed: Prices are unchanged, the inquiry being quite nominal. Rapeseed: We quote a decline of 2 annas per cwt., but stocks are small, and there is nothing doing for export.

LOSS OF A LARGE PORTUGUESE SHIP AT GOA.—The Portuguese ship Cidade de Belem, 800 tons, bound from Goa to Lisbon with a general cargo, became a total wreck on the bar of Goa River on the morning of the 10th of May, under the following circumstances:—The vessel was proceeding to sea in tow of the steamer Phlox, the captain of the port being on board the ship and a pilot on board the steamer. On attempting to cross the bar, on which a very heavy sea was running, the ship struck with great force, unshipping the rudder. She then struck violently several times, and finally grounded and stuck fast. The steamer remained for some time endeavouring to get her off, but to no avail, the tide beginning to ebb. The vessel lay deserted on the bar, the crew having left her, and the next high water she floated and drifted off, grounding on the opposite beach, where she now lies a total wreck. After the grounding of the vessel on the bar the crew would not work longer, and prepared to go on shore. On the 6th of May a large country brig, laden with rice from Bengal, was also lost on the bar of the Goa River. She was endeavouring to cross without a pilot, a heavy sea running at the time. She broached to, and grounded on the bank, where she speedily became a wreck. No lives were lost.—Bombay Gazette, May 20.

THE STRENGTH OF THE INDIAN ARMY.—The Indian Army is not on a peace footing. It has, I have excellent authority for saying, been for many years admitted by those in every way competent to judge, that the artillery force in India has been in access of all possible military requirements, and that extensive reductions in the arm have been pressed on the home authorities by successive Governments out here before ever financial crises compelled a scrutiny of our army estimates, and long before events in Europe brought the army question so prominently to the front in England. That England wanted what India could no longer keep is fortunate, but the synchronism was a lucky accident and no more. That the artillery in India would be brought into due proportion with the other arms of the service was certain, and a question of time merely, being contingent on the final settlement of the established and permanent strength of the military forces, European and native, for India. This point is now settled, and the changes considered necessary have, after much discussion with the home authorities and long opposition in the Imperial rather than the Indian interest—forgive the tu quoque—been carried into effect. The broad result is that with a force of infantry and cavalry, decided after really careful and authoritative deliberation to be fully adequate to meet any of the contingencies of service in India, the artillery has been fixed at a strength which will enable the Commander-in-Chief to bring seven guns, efficiently horsed, manned, and equipped, for every two thousand men in any army which could be or would ever need to be placed in the field, leaving an ample reserve of both field and garrison artillery for the requirements of the garrisons of obligatory points. This, I believe, would be considered a sufficient proportion of artillery even in European warfare; for Indian warfare it is liberal indeed. Under no conceivable circumstances, within that range of probabilities against which only it is reasonable to take precautions, could any artillery be brought against our Indian forces fitted either in weight, numbers, character, or equipment to cope for an instant with what would be opposed to it. If it be admitted, as I am satisfied it must be, that the proportion I have given is amply sufficient for India with her armies on a war footing, the objections raised to the reductions made in the number of guns within the last few years fall to the ground, as no one, I suppose, will venture to assert that the taxpayers of India should be burthened with the maintenance of a larger army than is required to ensure the peace and security of the country.—Pall Mall Gazette Correspondent.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The half-yearly general meeting of the above company was held at the offices, Leadenhall-street, Mr. PATRICK DOUGLAS HADOW in the chair. The notice calling the meeting was read by Mr. HOWELL, the secretary.

The report was taken as read.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the meeting was held for the purpose of declaring an interim dividend; at the same time he would be glad to give the shareholders any particulars as regards the company, and to answer any questions that might be put. He was happy to state that for the last six months they had been entirely exempt from any loss. He was happy to state this—which was an important point—as it showed the efficient management from the top to the bottom of their staff. The state of the fleet was fully set forth in the report, and showed a slight reduction of tonnage; but this was more apparent than real, as they had parted with ships not useful, and added first-class vessels to the fleet. The Khedive had showed very favourable results, the accounts being most satisfactory, having started for the East, and passed through the Suez Canal in thirteen days from Southampton, at a consumption of thirty tons of coal per diem; and when it was recollected that they congratulated themselves upon the consumption of sixty tons of coal per day, he thought that they might fairly congratulate themselves now. The Indus has been brought into active service, and had performed most satisfactorily, and was now on her voyage to the East, and her arrival at Gibraltar would be shortly announced. The Mirzapore was launched on the 20th ultimo, and the Peshawur, previously called the Agra, is making satisfactory progress, so that by October they expect to have six new steamers. He could not help referring to the Haddington, that had served them so well; it had been parted with since the opening of the Suez Canal as of no further advantage to the company. Owing to the competition from the opening of the Suez Canal, they had been compelled to make certain alterations in the rates of passage money, and had allowed the passengers to take wines and spirits at their own option. Since 1867, the last call being made in 1868, they had expended £600,000 upon the new fleet without making any further demand upon the shareholders, showing that the parting with the smaller vessels had not been so disadvantageous to the company as was by some parties imagined. He hoped to see four more steamers added to the fleet—but this was a feeling of his own—without calling up fresh capital. The death of Mr. Wooley, their superintendent purser, was a matter of deep regret, though he had lived to see the completion of the new scheme as regards the lower rating of passengers. The war, though it was supposed otherwise, had affected the receipts injuriously. The company have determined to continue the Brindisi line, though it required developing, to which they will give their earnest attention. It had been asked, why not adopt the Suez Canal route? but it must be recollected that they had the usual service to conduct, and that punctuality was essential; but they have adopted it, and will continue to do so, where it is beneficial to the company, as it had been found in the case of sending out coal, and bringing vessels home for repairs, &c. The Australie had made a good voyage out, and was now returning through the Suez Canal with the first cargo of tea from China. Instead of a sacrifice it was found eventually to be advantageous to the company to sell their smaller vessels, in order to obtain steamers with increased tonnage.

The report, having been seconded by Mr. GIBBINS—after some remarks from Messrs. JONES, DAVIS, &c., relative to the company being their own importers of wine, the purchasing of coal, &c., all of which were satisfactorily replied to by the CHAIRMAN—was adopted, and the dividend of 3 per cent. for the half-year declared.

A vote of thanks to the chairman and directors closed the proceedings.

LONDON ASSOCIATION FOR SOCIAL PROGRESS IN INDIA.

The inaugural lecture was delivered on Thursday afternoon by I. T. Prichard, Esq., at the Rooms of the Society of Arts. The chair was taken by Hodgson Pratt, Esq. The attendance was numerous and respectable, including Sir John Bowring, the Rev. W. H. Fremantle, the Rev. T. Binney, Rev. W. H. Channing, The Dewan Kazi Shahabudin, Dr. Ghose, Hurry Chund Chintamon, Syed Ameer Ali, &c.; Mr. Hickson, Mrs. W. Akroyd, Madame Ronniger, Almaric Rumsey, Esq., J. C. A. Scott, Esq., S. S. Taylor, Esq., the Rev. T. Hunter, &c.

Mr. Prichard commenced by alluding to the diversity of matter implied in studying a Continent like India, as large as Europe without Russia, containing a sixth of the human race, varying in climate from tropical heat to extreme cold, with races differing as much as Highlanders and South Italians. We cannot apply to such a country any stereotyped principles of government. The construction of Indian canals and railways requires a special modification of engineering principles; so also with axioms of political economy. We do not realise the value of India. Twelve millions sterling is its annual value to England in hard cash. Sixteen hundred millions are the total pecuniary profit England has realised from India. Each European nation has in turn enjoyed a monopoly of the Indian trade, and has risen in consequence in the European scale. At present there is a great movement going on in India, not purely moral, social, or political, but combining all these characters. It is a movement of thought; no one can tell what shape it will ultimately assume. India has been in a state of coma for centuries, and is now awakening. There have been premonitory symptoms. The Rebellion of 1857 was one of these. Topics of social reform and religious speculation occupy the Indian mind at present. It may be compared to an "adult birth." Suppose a person born in an adult state, with faculties mature, but without the guidance of experience from youth to manhood. What questions would he put to himself? He would inquire into his physical conditions, his needs and the supply for them, his destiny, and political rights relatively to society. In India two hundred millions are awakening to the problem of life, and they will ask ultimately, what are their political rights? He wished the English could be roused to take an intelligent interest before this occurred, and to direct the spirit of inquiry into a healthy channel, so as to supply the young giant who is crying out for food. One great source of this movement is contact with European thought. But it is really indigenous. The modern school of Hindooism is represented by the Brahmo Somaj. Educated men could not retain their faith in much that was stated in the Hindoo writings such as, for instance, that an eclipse was caused by a dragon devouring the sun. They had drifted into a Theistic philosophy. Some saw in this a form of Christianity, but this was a mistake. It is true there was a coincidence as to their views on duties. The Brahmos had already worked a revolution. He said already, because it is going on with rapid strides. It is too early to prognosticate. The old fetters are thrown aside not to be resumed. Caste is decaying. Among the Mahomedans there is an awakening of religious zeal, a sort of revival, inclining them to education in European science, but aiming to preserve intact the citadel of their religious system. By those who were guided by the letters in the Times, India was viewed as comprised within the three large presidency towns, and the rest was supposed to beat in harmony with them. This was a great mistake, which has before now cost useless expenditure and valuable lives. London is one-ninth of the United Kingdom; Paris is one-fifteenth of France. But Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, taken together, did not form more than one one-hundred-and-twentieth part of the whole of India. Incalculable good might be done by the extra-governmental influence of a well-supported Association. It did not call for great outlay, but for enthusiasm, energy, judgment. They must devise means for meeting the ignorance which prevails in England. Lectures will be given once a month by competent men, under the auspices of the Association. As to work in India, Englishmen should aid rather than initiate. As to female education, feelings differ in different parts of India. In the centres of population there was a wish among the wealthier natives to provide their wives and daughters with an education in the literature and science of the West, as well as with accomplishments. But among the Mahometans of Upper India there was a decided aversion to it. Their ladies are taught Persian, Arabic, music, singing, and needlework. They do not want English teachers. But the Hindoos offer a wide field for English philanthropy. Fifty thousand girls are now attending female schools in India. There are desultory efforts, often made by the wives of missionaries; and the education is not worth much. This Association might inspect such schools through trustworthy agents. Other machinery is required. Good families will not send their daughters away from home. What is required is the development of the "zenana system." Properly trained female teachers are requisite. Government has been aiming to supply this want; the Association should do so on a more extended scale. The desire for female education is very strong among large masses. There are other departments of social progress, for instance, Schools of Art and Industry should be encouraged; object-lessons would be invaluable. Many Indian gentlemen now come over to this country, to obtain a thorough English, as distinguished from an Anglo-Indian education, and to qualify for the bar, the civil service, medicine or literature. We should encourage this, and give them the means of mixing in English society, and becoming acquainted with our domestic life. Notwithstanding the time which he had spent in India, he never knew the native character until he had met Indian gentlemen upon English soil. Mr. Prichard concluded by answering some objections that might be made against the Society, and by stating that its objects were purely secular, and that it would observe neutrality in regard to religion.

The meeting was then addressed by the Chairman, Rev. W. H. Fremantle, the Rev. W. H. Channing, Sir John Bowring, W. C. Cooper, Esq., Dr. Ghose, of Calcutta, and Ananda Mohan Bose, after which Mr. Hunter, one of the secretaries, announced that the next lecture, on Female Education in India, will be delivered by Dr. Ghose, on Friday, June 23, at eight in the evening, at the Rooms of the Social Science Association, 1, Adam-street, Adelphi.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Committee reassembled on Tuesday, June 6.

Sir Rutherford Alcock's examination on the China phase of the opium question was continued. In the earlier part of his evidence Sir Rutherford called attention to the fact that the opium had virtues as well as its vicious qualities. In a malarious climate like the Chinese ports, the drug was considered a panacea for dysentery, a disease common among the people, and arising from the unwholesome air and food they were accustomed to. The stronger opium being found to allay intestinal pains, that was one cause of its being so universally resorted to. In reference to the commercial aspect of the question, the witness read from a report of the delegates of the Chamber of Commerce, Shanghai, which stated that since the year 1865 there had hardly been any increase in the exports of the opium from India; while exports of British manufactured goods had increased annually since that time. The native cultivation had something to do with the falling off of the opium exports from India. As British manufactures were more and more in demand they would go on increasing, and to such an extent, probably, that those exports would be so profitable as to compensate for the withdrawal from the opium traffic altogether. This was the desiderated object, regarding which the British and Chinese Governments had held correspondence. As regarded the native-grown opium, the witness said his remedy was to restrict the area of cultivation by provincial and municipal regulations imposed under imperial edicts. It was open and feasible for both the Chinese and our own Governments to greatly moderate the evils alike of the imported and native drug by coming to new treaty arrangements, whereby, on the one side, the traffic might be abandoned or limited; on the other side, the area of the native cultivation might be restricted. It was feasible at least to regulate and limit the opium trade, if you could not absolutely forbid and prevent the importation; and such considerations should weigh with both nations. If they did not, the only means apparently open to China of carrying out its political aversion to the traffic was nothing less than a declaration of war, which would liberate the Imperial Government from the bonds of treaties. These views or opinions the witness had submitted to the Indian Council at Calcutta, and they were contained in a paper which he now laid before the committee. (Sir Rutherford here read from this memorandum.) It stated the official objections to interference with the opium traffic prevailing at Calcutta. The Indian Government appeared to fear that any radical interference with the traffic would lay it open to other hands, or create a powerful competition. Both Sir H. Durand and Sir C. Beadon, however, accepted his propositions, viz., to legislate for narrowing the cultivation both in India and in China, and to rearrange the whole system of the production of opium, with the aim of moderating the supply to China. As nearly all the opium got into China under the British flag, it was by our own means mainly that it reached the country. Could we not, then, as well narrow or limit, as augment, the supply? Other opium-producing countries seeking to import the drug into China did so under the protection of the British flag; therefore we were the responsible parties in carrying on the traffic. It remained with us, then, to place the trade upon a more honourable footing, and thus conciliate the Chinese Government, who not unreasonably complained.

The evidence next bore upon the vexed question of the missionaries in China. The missionaries, the witness believed, worked hard to instil into the minds of the people the immorality, as well as the physical harm, of the use of the drug. They called it an insidious poison, debasing in its effects, and corrupting to the mind. Witness allowed this might be an exaggerated view of the matter, the drug, as ordinarily used, not appearing to debilitate or corrupt the smokers. On the contrary, the fact was, as he had stated before, that in laborious occupations, such as agriculture and on the coast, strong men smoked without its bringing on lassitude, or leading to idleness. Many of the labouring class, although constant smokers, lived to a good old age. The opium was looked upon as a necessary of life. In an official report, dated in 1869, he saw that the missionaries belonging to the Church Missionary Society were charged with undue interference with the habits and customs of the people, so much so as to stir up their political feelings. It had become a creed of the Chinese Government that missionaries and opium went together in effecting political agitation. They said, in effect, if they could be rid of the missionaries and the opium the country would be happy. The Roman Catholic missionaries sent from France were more disliked, and caused more political irritation than the Protestants sent from England. When at Pekin he had conversed with Prince Kung on the subject of the Missionaries, and the Minister had advised that a clause should be introduced into the Treaty limiting the action of the Missionaries, and the same also in the French Treaty. The witness referred to a Chinese work held in some estimation for its bold attack upon Christian creeds. It was written by a Chinese Jew, and the title of the book was translated as "The Protest of a Man most Distressed at Heart." This work was cited by Chinese politicals as conveying their opinions on Christian missions in China. The professed religion of the Chinese was Buddhism; but there was another form of religion akin to rationalism. A charge brought against the French missionaries by the Chinese theologians was that the former had introduced the Roman Catholic Confessional to the homes of the people, a practice held in extreme dread and dislike by Buddhists and rationalists alike. Chinese women, who, by custom, were kept from intrusion on the privacy of their homes even by their own countrymen, ought therefore, to be protected from such intrusion on the part of foreign priests, who were utter strangers to them. But the known fact that the priests did intrude upon the houses of the poor, and even of the middle classes, had created much irritation and even indignation.

Mr. Charles Winchester, late Consul at Shanghai, was next called and examined on the use of opium by the Chinese. He stated that having travelled in various parts of China, and being acquainted with the ports of Shanghai, Amoy, Hankow, &c., he had seen a good deal of the effects of the introduction of the opium. He considered there was a certain aptitude in the people lying near the coast for stimulants. He might be allowed to state, as a medical man, that he thought it arose from the febrile physiques of the natives, and he agreed with the previous witness that the malarious climate, the food, and the bad sanitary state of the homes of the natives, rendered a narcotic such as the opium drug acceptable as a compensation for, or corrective of, physical and domestic discomforts. The Chinese method of manuring the soil, although favourable to the growth of crops, was, in a sanitary sense, injurious to the physique or constitution. The witness proceeded to give the results of his observations over a considerable extent of China, along the coast and in the interior. As regarded the social effects and political considerations arising from the consumption of the drug, his experience endorsed that of Sir Rutherford Alcock, Mr. T. T. Cooper, and other gentlemen who had given their evidence; as already mentioned, the Chinese public officers in the various provinces he had visited, professed to object to, and condemned the use and cultivation of opium; it was their duty, indeed, to check the cultivation; but they did not do so from peculative reasons of their own, and while they objected to the drug, they consumed it themselves, sometimes openly, sometimes in secret. He had found that it was only in the case of excessive smokers that the indolence and prostration were seen; but the evil effects were brought about at a pecuniary cost the mere labourer could not afford. A smoker might spend £100 a year in the indulgence to very great excess, and kill himself into the bargain, as confirmed drunkards have done in other countries. As an argument that the habit could be broken off by moderate consumers, he cited the emigrant Chinese coolies in California who could get but very little opium, but did not there find it a necessity or a stimulant to labour. The witness's opinion with regard to regulating the trade was that opium had been introduced into China under a vicious system of laws; but it ought to be put on the same footing as other articles of customs. The course of opium-smoking was felt by the middle classes who could afford to spend four or five hundred dollars a year upon the indulgence, and become thus intemperate to excess.

Mr. J. Knott Bullen, of the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce, was next called and examined on the fiscal system of Bengal. His information bore on the exports and imports of Bengal, and the effect that duties had upon trade. The abolition of inland duties was referred to as having given an impetus to the internal trade of the country. The more recent remissions of customs revenue had much increased the prosperity of the internal trade. The ready importation of British manufactured goods had been felt as a great boon by the people of Bengal. The greater part of the population was now clothed in British manufactured cloths. There had been latterly an experiment at home manufacture of cotton goods in Lower Bengal, and cotton mills had been sent out with all the necessary machinery, but the experiment was merely tentative at present. There were anomalies in the export trade which still called for reform. After some further information had been elicited regarding articles of export and import, and the means of freeing them from remaining duties, so as to increase the benefit to the natives as well as the general trade, the examination ended, and the committee adjourned.

The Committee met again on Friday. Mr. H. L. Harrison, of the Controller General's Department, was examined at great length on the Financial arrangements of the Government generally. The more important points of the witness's evidence were elicited chiefly by Mr. Fawcett, M.P. for Brighton, and established that the Financial system of the Indian Government was open to very considerable reform, especially as regarded the modes of effecting loans, and making advances to the Presidency banks and public companies, wherin the transactions had been in some instances of a most unprofitable nature to the Indian Exchequer.

The evidence will be further reported in our next.

Miscellaneous.

MILITARY.—By the end of next week the whole of the depots of the cavalry regiments in India, viz., those of the 3rd, 4th, 11th, 15th, 18th, 20th, and 21st Hussars, and 5th and 16th Lancers, will be assembled at Canterbury, and the Cavalry Depot reduced last year, will be re-established.—Army and Navy Gazette.

TELEGRAPH RECEIPTS.—The traffic receipts of the Falmouth, Gibraltar, and Malta Telegraph Company for the month of May were £7,263. 15s. 4d. The receipts of the British Indian Submarine Telegraph Company for the same month were £10,752. 18s. The Marseilles, Algiers, and Malta Telegraph Company's receipts for the month of April were £813. 5s.

THE CEYLON COMPANY.—The report of the Ceylon Company, Limited, for the year ending 31st March last has been issued. It states that the net profit amounts to £53,712. 19s. 4d., and a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum is proposed. £5,000 being added to reserve, and a balance of £4,267. 14s. 8d. carried forward.

BOMBAY GAS COMPANY.—The report of the Bombay Gas Company states that the net profit for the half-year amounted to £10,410, and a dividend is recommended of 3½ per cent., in addition to the interim distribution of 3½ per cent. in January last. The new contract with the municipality of Bombay for the supply of public lights for seven years has been signed.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 7th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £300,000, and to Bombay, £100,000. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 10¼d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10⅝d. will receive about 15 per cent., and on Bombay at that price about 31 per cent.

ROYAL ARTILLERY AND ROYAL ENGINEERS' BOAT RACE.—This annual event, which has hitherto been contested on the Thames above Putney, will be rowed on Saturday next, June 17, on the Medway at Chatham. The Artillery crew will be composed of Capt. Le Mesurier, Lieut. Larcom, Lieut. Preston, Lieut. Lowther, and Lieut. Jones, coxswain. They left Woolwich on Saturday for a week's practice on the Medway, accompanied by their trainer and their match boat, which is the one built by Salter for the Oxford crew when engaged in their match with Harvard University.

OUDE AND ROHILCUND RAILWAY.—The report of the Oude and Rohilcund Railway Company (Limited), to be presented on the 14th inst., states the earnings of the half-year amount to Rs. 120,607, and the expenses to Rs. 83,638, showing a profit of Rs. 36,969, against a net profit of Rs. 25,819 in the second half of 1869. The statement of capital account shows a total receipt of £2,804,488, and a total expenditure of £1,479,289, leaving a balance in hand in cash and stores on the 31st of December of £1,325,199. The progress of the works has been somewhat retarded by exceptionally heavy floods.

SNAKE-POISONING.—From official and reliable returns of fatal cases of snake-poisoning, collected by Dr. Fayrer from the principal provinces of India, it appears that 11,416 deaths from snake-bite were recorded in Bengal, North-West Provinces, Punjab, Oude, Central Provinces, Central India, and British Burmah. No returns were made from the Madras and Bombay Presidencies and other parts of India; and Dr. Fayrer estimates the total annual mortality from this cause at not less than twenty thousand persons.—British Medical Journal.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.—The report of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway for the half-year ending the 31st December last has been issued. It states that the net profit amounted to £44,035. 2s. 10d., compared with £24,023. 7s. 3d. in the corresponding period of last year. The total expenditure charged in the revenue account is £130,501. 15s. 8d., compared with £149,260. 7s. 1d. in 1869, showing a decrease of £18,758. 11s. 5d. In compliance with the request of many of the extension shareholders, the board will give them the opportunity on or before the 28th June of paying up their shares in full, and then having them converted into extension stock, which will become ordinary stock on the opening of the line.

ORIENTAL COMMERCIAL BANK.—Vice-Chancellor Bacon had before him on Tuesday the case of this bank, in the winding-up of which the question arose whether Class B—that is to say, those persons who, by a transfer of their shares a year before the date of the winding-up order had ceased to be members—were liable to contribute to the payment of the company's debts. The Vice-Chancellor said that those who were members at the date of the winding-up order must contribute, if necessary, to their last shilling to the payment of the company's debts; and, if they were unable to discharge the whole of the debts, then each of the Class B. to the extent remaining unpaid on his shares, would be liable for the total amount of the company's indebtedness at the time when he transferred his shares, and which remained payable at the date of the winding-up order.

THE ANGLO-MEDITERRANEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The directors of the Anglo-Mediterranean Telegraph Company have issued their report for the year ending 30th April. They state that they have purchased from the Government the cable between Malta, Tripoli, and Egypt, for the sum of £25,000, with a view to its being picked up, and have resold it to the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company at the same price. By this arrangement the yearly rent of £2,000, increasing to £5,000, payable to the Treasury, ceased on the 31st of December last. An arrangement with the Italian Government is on the point of completion for transferring the company's land line from Susa to Modica. The accounts show a total revenue for the year of £78,789. 4s. 1d.; and after carrying to reserve fund for repairs of cables the sum of £7,845. 17s. 7d., and deducting income-tax on profits, there remains a balance of £46,866. 2s. 5d. Out of this amount 6 per cent. has already been distributed, and a further dividend of 6 per cent. is now recommended.

ORIENTAL INLAND STEAM COMPANY.—A bill filed by this company came on for hearing before the Lords Justices of Appeal on Wednesday. The bill prayed that the Secretary of State for India and the Scinde Railway Company might be compelled to specifically perform an alleged agreement to purchase the business of the plaintiffs for £75,000 in fully-paid shares of the Scinde Railway Company. The company of the plaintiffs and the "Indus Flotilla Company" were both engaged in navigating rivers in India, and the latter company was by Act of Parliament incorporated with the Scinde Railway, over which the Governor of India exercises a certain amount of control. The Oriental Company and the Indus Company, by their competition, were each doing the other injury, and had both to work at a loss; and, to put an end to this state of things, it was agreed that the former should dispose of their business to the Scinde Railway Company for £75,000 in fully paid-up shares of the Indus Flotilla Company. This purchase was subject to the approval of the Bombay Government; and the question which arose in the case was whether this approval was given. The Vice-Chancellor held that it was; the Lords Justices that it was not.

COURT OF DIVORCE, JUNE 10.—DONNE v. DONNE AND SHEPHERD.—This was the husband's petition for divorce, on the ground of the wife's adultery. Neither the respondent nor the co-respondent appeared. Dr. Spinks, Q.C., and Mr. Searle for the petitioner. The petitioner is a captain in the 109th Bombay Infantry. He married the respondent in 1860, and she accompanied him to India. She there gave birth to a child in 1866, and returned to England in the following year for the benefit of her health. She stayed with the petitioner's father in London, and with his brother at Faversham, where she made the acquaintance of the co-respondent, Mr. Frank Walter Shepherd, the son of a brewer. An intimacy sprung up between them, and in July, 1868, she eloped with him from Liverpool, where she had gone on a visit to her aunt. She left a note, requesting the nurse to be kind to the child, and nothing more was heard of her until last November, when she was accidentally met in St. James's Park. It was then ascertained that she was living in Milton-street, Dorset-square, with the co-respondent, as his wife, and that on leaving Liverpool they had gone to Paris, and resided there until October, 1870, when they left in consequence of the war. There was no defence, and the Court granted a decree nisi, with costs.

WILLS.—The will of Lieut.-General Sir William Thomas Denison, K.C.B., formerly Governor of Madras, was proved in London on the 24th ult., by his relict, Dame Caroline Lucy Denison, and his son, Mr. William Evelyn Denison, the acting executors; power being reserved to his brother, Mr. Stephen C. Denison, barrister-at-law, and Mr. James W. Breeks, the other executors appointed. The will is dated September 30, 1846, when the testator was about to embark for Van Diemen's Land, being appointed Lieutenant-Governor of that colony. He had since held other colonial appointments, and, during the interval between the death of the Earl of Elgin and the arrival of Sir John Lawrence, was acting as Governor-General of India. Sir William was possessed of property in India, and leaves all his shares in the Ossington Estate, Madras, and his houses and ground-rents in England, to his wife and children. As regards the property he acquired under the will of his late brother Henry, he divides the same among his (testator's) daughters. He bequeaths all the presentation plate to his eldest son. There are two codicils, dated 1863 and 1866, and the gallant and distinguished General died January 19 last, at his residence, the Observatory House, East Sheen, Surrey, aged sixty-seven. The personalty in England was sworn under £3,000.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MONDAY, June 5.—RECRUITING FOR THE ARMY.—Lord SANDHURST, before calling attention to certain General Orders affecting army reserve and enlistment, premised that he did not intend to refer to the Army Bill, and that he spoke in no antagonism to the Government. Sharply criticising the orders in question, he complained that they were filling the army with half-grown starveling boys, instead of grown men capable of sustaining fatigue. When
